its increasing business.

Only last week it was announced that the Vancouver lines mill is planning an addition to its factory, made necessary by fighting. The officers charged roved.

Experienced men have repeatedly told us that Oregon lin ens may easily be brought to such refinement of culture, processing and manufacture that they will rank with the best products of Ireland's famous looms.

It is just another instance of opportunity battering away year after year at Oregon's door, and waiting only the invitation of a little confident capital to come in and make itsel. at home.

WHAT OREGON MAKES

(Portland Journal)

When twine for fish nets from the Miles flax mill at Salen first went on the market, the price was $2.75 per pound. The trust immediately cut the price to $2. The trust had been the sole manufacturer in America. The Salem mill met the cut Later the trust was compelled by cost of raw material from beyond the Atlantic to raise the price to $2.30. The Miles min kept the price at $2 because at the low cost of its raw materia it makes a handsome profit at that figure. This shows what western Oregon can do in the flax industry.

Three hundred thousand pounds of inferior fiber which the Salem mill couldn't use piled up in the warehouse. Recently it was sold to mills in Ireland at a good figure. And the Irist manufacturers clamored for more. This is another example o. what Oregon flax means.

A Chicago establishment bought a small lot of sacking walnuts, will within a few years twine from the Miles mill. It liked the goods so well that in pay good interest on a good deal operation. These are mere minor incidents in an industry that can be made a great Oregon development. Flax is a crop in which a ton of walnuts each. Oregon farmers are without a competitor in America. There are 240,000 acres of flax land in western Oregon, according to pay well now. Mr. Needham sold a survey by the Oregon State college.

Whatever Portland capital does to forward that development is investment that will keep the profits in Oregon, that of the "jumbo" size. will give labor all year round employment, that will keep Oregon wages in Oregon, that will make Oregon the center of a nish a wonderful opportunity for great industry on which two or three European nations main- making Franquette trees that will ly live and that will turn Oregon soil into a development in be hardy and fruitful.
