the aisle waving it. Another followed then another, and finally with a rush, the aisles were filled with prancing, shouting men, holding aloft the heavy wooden signs bearing the insignia of their delegations.

One march around the building still found most of the anti-Smith standards in place and heavily guarded. Another round saw a struggle in the North Carolina delegation and signs of one farther back around the Georgia sign. Tennessee and Alabama were sitting tight near the front of the hall, with determined anti-Smith men ready to go down fighting.

Then, as suddenly by main force, the North Carolina banner was snatched from the stubborn grip of its defenders and rushed into the parade. It progressed about three feet and became entangled in a mass of pushing, fighting humanity, engaged in a tug of war. A few minutes of this and in some way the heavy pole was placed across the bare head of a delegate, while men on each end bore downward. This operation completely demolished the emblem, but the fighting continued over the wreckage.

By this time Georgia was in real action, with two members contending for possession of her standard and a crowd gathered about that swaying wooden banner. It developed that a difference of opinion had developed between Charles Brown, of Cordele, and Andrew C. Erwin of Athens, and that the delegation had voted on whether to allow the standard to go into the procession. In the confusion and uproar all about them, the Georgians lost the count, but finally Judge A. B. Lovett, of Savannah, was permitted to parade the name of Georgia around the hall.

The sight of the Georgia banner among the celebrants incited the Smith people to renewed efforts in the direction of Tennessee, North Carolina and Alabama. Some one rushed to the rear of the hall and grabbed the North Carolina alternate standard and jumped up on the table in front of the speakers' stand, holding it as another scramble, and one of the supporters of the wooden contraption was broken in a jam around the North Carolina seats.

Alabama, whose banner was held tight in the arms of A. H. Carmichael, was the next center of attack. The jumble of men who had surrounded North Carolina's section moved a few steps backward to the Alabama section and came together as a single mass, bending Carmichael backwards at an alarming angle with the heavy pole clasped tight across his chest and over his left shoulder. Three or four husky fellow Alabamians massed about him as a protecting group of shock troops and stayed off what might have been a serious outbreak.

Then it was the turn of Tennessee which held its ground valiantly against sporadic attacks made by jubilant members. As it by preconcerted action, a husky individual gave the word to someone beside him and the standard of Old Hickory's home state was rushed, by football tactics, down the aisle. In the added confusion of this group, the jam became serious near the speakers' stand, and one man was seen to raise one of the heavy instruments, as if to strike a fellow delegate. Someone else grabbed him and the two went down, the pole end of the standard only showing above the jumble. Apparently there were no casualties.

Senator Robinson who has been in the forefront as a vice presidential possibility, now began to call for order. He pounded heavily with the huge gavel without effect and one of the bands, which apparently was enjoying the wild scene, insisted on furnishing the necessary music to keep it going.

Finally Robinson, by raising his thunderous voice, succeeded in getting across the admonition that "gentlemen" would be seated, and with a few words he finished his address. He was wildly applauded and as if nothing had happened the perspiring, panting delegates who had joined in the demonstration proceeded to approve minor resolutions in the most harmonious manner.

A check up revealed that the Alabama and Florida standards were among the few which stayed in place throughout the day. It was also noted that when the struggling over standards was fiercest that most of the delegates sat in their seats and enjoyed it.

Whether the calm which followed today's storm is to last is the problem which is troubling the leaders of the party. The fight over the prohibition plank threatens to develop into a knockdown and drag out fight on the floor. The dries have determined that the 18th amendment should be mentioned by name in the platform as an act which should be held inviolate.

The moderates have endeavored in vain, so far, to win support for a plank for law enforcement in general.

At least one battle was smoothed over today through a compromise offered by Mayor Walker of New York, who suggested that nominating speeches be permitted before the adoption of a platform. This was agreed to by the rules committee, after a difference had developed over when a candidate for president should be selected. Mayor Walker's compromise provided that no selection could be made until after the platform fight had been disposed of.

Tonight's session, in the regular order, would consider the report of the platform committee. That being impossible, because there is no such report, the next business is the nominating speeches.

Georgia got first call, because her sister state Alabama yielded alphabetical priority to permit Charles Crisp of Americus to place Senator Walter F. George before the convention. Arizona gave her place to New York and Franklin D. Roosevelt, was next to nominate Governor Smith. Charles J. Howell of Kansas City and Harvey H. Hanna of Tennessee were the speakers for Senator James A. Road of Missouri, and Representative Cordell Hull of Tennessee, respectively the other principal candidates.

With the nominating speeches out of the way, nothing remains in the way of a final decision on the presidential nomination, now generally conceded to Governor Smith, except the settlement of the bitter prohibition row.

Some 15 minutes after the din began and while it still was going as strong as ever, a second round of flying fists about the Mississippi standard had to be settled by the police. It developed that the trouble started this time when the alternate standard was paraded a little too boldly to suit the Mississippi delegates who were guarding their own.

Twenty minutes after the demonstration began, Chairman Robinson pounded for order but he could not make himself heard. He sent pages scurrying to quiet the bands and soon thereafter things all about the hall then began to quiet down. The paraders jostled back to their places, all but a few who still insisted on whooping it up individually.

Mrs. Nellie Taylor Ross of Wyoming spoke seconding Smith's nomination.

Senator Barkley of Kentucky likewise seconded the nomination of Gov. Smith.

"Are we told that he ought not to be nominated because his views upon the wisdom of the 18th amendment and the laws passed for its enforcement may not coincide at every point with some of ours?"

"I answer that neither did those of Woodrow Wilson," Barkley said.

Born and nurtured in the Presbyterian church, Barkley said he was "not ashamed to lift my feeble voice in behalf of the nomination of one who is not of my faith but who has as much right to his as I have to mine."

William H. O'Brien of Lawrenceburg, Ind., presented the name of Evans Woolen in a very brief address.

He called Woolen a "plain, everyday democrat." Indians in the audience had a demonstration of their own for about 30 seconds.

The last speaker at the night session was Mrs. Stella Hamlin of New Orleans, the new national committee woman from Louisiana. She seconded the nomination of Smith, speaking to a fast emptying hall, for just before she was presented Chairman Robinson announced that the convention was preparing to adjourn. The delegates evidently had tired of the long stretch of oratory and noise; it was after eleven o'clock; and everybody saw a big day ahead tomorrow, and was anxious to get to bed.

When the convention adjourned at 11:15 p. m. to meet again at 10:30 o'clock tomorrow morning, Senator Reed of Missouri, Gilbert M. Hitchcock of Nebraska, Cordell Hull of Tennessee, and Atlee Pomerene of Ohio, all duly registered candidates, remained to be placed in nomination.

after the first ballot. "If Smith is not nominated then" failed. Harry Harris, of Kansas, offered the suggestion but it went by the boards with hardly a moment of consideration. The general answer seemed to be "let's take that up later" and the dries went ahead with plans to salvage a dry plank from the wreckage of their campaign against Smith.
