

Jugoslavs Fear Italian Ambition Among Balkans

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia, July 6. (AP)—"What does Italy want in the Balkans?" is a question put uppermost in the political thinking of Yugoslav statesmen and publicists. Public sympathy here was decidedly with the students who staged the anti-Italian riots recently, and, behind this, Yugoslav leaders, looking broadly to the future of their new nation, see in various manifestations of Italian interest across the Adriatic consequences disturbing to Yugoslavia's international position and the direction of its foreign policy. The viewpoint is that after driving out the Turks and the Austrians the South Slav peoples found themselves at the end of the great war united at last after over 500 years of separation. At the peace conference they got almost all they could hope for, more than they had ever dared dream of a few years before. Now, these aspirations realized, they want to digest what they have gained, to reorganize internally and build up a compact and healthy state. They already have accomplished much, but are confronted with misgivings over the purposes of Italy. It is the Italian enterprise in Albania that especially arouses the Yugoslav suspicions. In respect to their relations with other Balkan neighbors, there is appar-

FORMER KLAN HEAD GETS DAY IN COURT

David Stephenson of Indiana To Tell How He Has Been Prosecuted

LA PORTE, Ind., July 7. (AP)—David C. Stephenson, Indiana's much discussed prisoner, is to have another opportunity to tell in open court what he terms his "persecution" by prison and state officials. Judge John C. Richter, in circuit court Friday ordered Stephenson brought before him July 18 to elaborate on allegations contained in a petition for a mandamus against the prison warden, trustees and Governor Ed Jackson. Judge Richter quashed the mandamus on a technicality. Stephenson complained he had been unable to confer privately with his attorneys, that a conspiracy existed to keep him from revealing what he knows of state politics, and that because he has been denied visitors, his business affairs have been neglected. Stephenson, formerly grand dragon of the Indiana Ku Klux Klan, and a political power during his regime, is serving a life sentence for the murder of an Indianapolis girl. Following his imprisonment at Michigan City more than two years ago, Stephenson was the center of a political storm that eventually engulfed the governor, resulting in his trial for attempted bribery. Stephenson claimed he was able to make startling revelations. He still makes that contention.

The south has won representation on the national democratic ticket for the first time since the Civil War with nomination of Joseph T. Robinson (left), senator from Arkansas, for vice president. While the Hungarian nobles can never forget that for many centuries they dominated the Slav peoples of several of the rich provinces now in Yugoslavia, their government has of late shown some signs of trying to make friendly arrangements with Yugoslavia—again because of economic reasons, for Hungarian industry can hardly live without selling abroad, and Yugoslavia is the most convenient market and demands goods that Hungary produces. But the new status of Albania, the tiny mountainous country which for many centuries had no independent existence until it was recreated at the end of the Balkan war of 1912 and its independence guaranteed by the great powers, worries the Yugoslav political mind. Albania's people are divided into many clans which live in almost isolated valleys and belong to three religions, Mohammedan, Orthodox Christian and Catholic. As yet it is held they have no strong national feeling. They have few roads, no railways and few economic undertakings. They need capital badly, but, according to the Yugoslav view, they have been forced to jeopardize their independence to get it from the Italians. The Yugoslavs believe that in time the Albanians—for they are a sturdy race—will assert their independence again, counting on the great powers, especially America and Great Britain to help them into economic independence. As an independent state Albania, the Yugoslavs argue, could live side by side with them in friendly cooperation. The Belgrade leaders see, however, in Italy's economic and political penetration of Albania a cause for distrust. They ask whether the ports she is building, the strategic roads to important points on the Yugoslav frontier, the dumps of war material of all sorts which she is alleged to be establishing in Albania, are intended to convert that country into a jumping off ground for an attack some day on Yugoslavia. They ask, too, if the Italian Fascists are in earnest when they talk of "freeing Italian Dalmatia," where, it is claimed here, 95 per cent of the people are Slav. To the Yugoslav way of thinking Italy's foreign policy at present seems to consist of aiding all those forces which tend to prevent Yugoslav consolidation and Balkan federation. Italy is charged with arousing hopes of the Hungarian nobles that they may recover their lands by revision of the Treaty of Trianon, with helping the Macedonian revolutionary organization in Bulgaria to stir up trouble and with using her influence with Greece to prevent an agreement on the Salonika question. The talk in Belgrade is that Italy fears the formation of a federal Balkan state which would have over 20,000,000 inhabitants stretch from the Adriatic to the Black Sea and thus make vain the dreams of economic penetration and political domination of the Balkans with which Italy seems to be suspected. The Yugoslavs feel that if what is described as Italian interference in the Balkans ends then peace will be assured and their country will be able rapidly to consolidate her internal and international position and become a prosperous and powerful state. But they hold that if Italy continues her present policy this consolidation will be hindered. As to any serious eventualities from these fears Yugoslavia looks confidently to the League of Nations, to her friendship with France and her alliances with the Little Entente to protect her.

CHINESE STUDENTS TO OMIT POLITICS

SHANGHAI, July 6 (AP)—Chinese students in Shanghai can best help their country and the Nationalist government by staying in school and studying hard instead of quitting their studies to engage in anti-Japanese propaganda and anti-Japanese boycott agitation, says General Chang Ting-fang, mayor of the Chinese city of Shanghai. The mayor's admonition to the youthful Chinese patriots came as a result of the latter's enthusiasm for engaging in anti-Japanese movements following the recent Nationalist-Japanese clashes in Shanghai. After the initial clashes at Tsinanfu, the capital of the province, the Chinese students unions here immediately got into action to establish an anti-Japanese boycott. To launch their campaigns the students quit school for days, resulting in the warning from their guest that the students confine mayor. In addition to the mayor's rather activities to their studies rather than to political questions, General Chin Ta-chun, defence commissioner of the Chinese areas in and about Shanghai, added a word of caution to the mayor's advice. Addressing a mass meeting of hundreds of students, the defence commissioner pointed out that such "serious" questions should be handled exclusively by the government rather than by civilian groups such as students. Following his talk to the students the defence commissioner issued an order preventing mass meetings to inspire anti-Japanese activities. This action stopped for the great part student activities, although they continue to agitate against the Japanese in less spectacular ways.

VISIT STATE PLANT

LEGISLATIVE COMMITTEE FROM MISSISSIPPI HERE

The state printing plant in Salem was yesterday inspected by a legislative committee from the state of Mississippi. Members of the visiting group were Senators B. F. Carter of Laurel and J. C. Zeller of Zelleria, and C. C. Pace, member of the Mississippi lower house. Senator Carter is chairman of the Mississippi legislative committee on state printing. Senator Zeller formerly lived at Tacoma where he was president of the College of Puget Sound. He located in Mississippi in 1914. The state of Mississippi proposes to establish a state printing plant of sufficient capacity to print textbooks for use in the public schools. The visiting legislators held a brief conference with Governor Patterson and left later for Portland where they will remain until Monday. The visitors said their investigations indicated that California had purchased textbooks at the rate of $3 each, for which the state of Mississippi had been required to pay $5. Senator Carter said the Oregon state printing plant compared favorably with those in other western states. The committee will visit a number of other western printing plants before returning to their homes. The visitors expressed the opinion that Mississippi would support the democratic candidate for president at the fall election.
