Mr. and Mrs. Roscoe Tartar and Miss Ann Tartar, all of Salem; and Dr. and Mrs. N. L. Tartar of Corvallis.

Surrounded by dozens of beautiful baskets of flowers sent by friends, Professor and Mrs. Tartar received their guests from three to six o'clock. Their children received with them and the three grandchildren welcomed the guests at the door. Telegrams were received throughout the day.

Salem District Boasts Many Fine Camp Grounds

Through the courtesy of C. A. Gies of the Triangle Realty company and proprietor of the Cherry City cottages, by the fairgrounds, a Statesmen representative was shown the auto camp of the Salem district yesterday afternoon. One thing that was impressed was the fact that the auto camp business is no more to be a sideline business, but rather a highly specialized business, just as selling merchandise or running any other business.

Tourists approaching Salem from the south first find a little camp owned and operated by A. S. Groce, called the White Arrow auto camp. This camp is three and one-half miles south of the city and has a large number of nice trees and considerable grassy land.

Mr. Groce has two double and two single cottages and can accommodate a large number of campers. He has a small store, and gives the use of grounds free for picnicking.

Considerably closer to the city is John Graber's Cold Spring park. Mr. Graber has built and furnished two cabins. One, a log cabin, is nicely finished inside, and has the conveniences of toilet, hot plate, fine kitchen and fire-place. Mr. Graber does not have camping on his grounds, but has many large picnics. He plans to build several more of his de luxe cabins and will install a swimming pool on his land later. He has nicely preserved the freshness of the native woods on his land, and has made his tract very inviting.

In West Salem two camps were visited. The Capital City Tourist camp has 16 cabins, showers, community kitchen and other conveniences. This is strictly a cabin camp and no tent camping is done here. S. L. Burk and son also have a West Salem park on the bank of the river. They have 10 cabins, four new, and several acres for tent camping in fine shade. These two West Salem camps are well equipped but have had a rather light business this season, due principally to the broadcasting of the news that there was a light fruit crop here this year. All camp owners reported that this report cut heavily into their business this year. Then, too, the fact that the west side is off the main highway means some what less potential trade, but in normal seasons business has been good.

The largest number of camps is to be found at the north of the city. Travelers from the north first see the Wenatchee camp, some two miles from the northern boundary of the city. This camp has 11 single cabins and some room for tent camping. Showers and laundry facilities are provided, and the cabins are far enough apart that their occupants enjoy some degree of privacy. A. B. Snyder, who is proprietor also has a small store on the grounds.

The Noah's Ark camp is just about a block north of the north city boundary. It has four double and six single accommodations. In the future it will be enlarged to some extent. Cold water is provided in all the cabins here, and an abundance of hot water is obtainable on the grounds. This establishment is rather new, and has a trade to build. It has a store on the ground, also.

Next the city boundary is the Unique camp ground and cabins, operated by C. L. Wright. The cabins on this ground are quite large, and either one or two beds may be used, according to the needs of the party using the cabin. This place will be enlarged next year, if present plans carry.

Adjacent to the entrance of the state fairgrounds are the Cherry City cottages, owned and operated by A. C. Gies. In this camp there are six single and four double cabins. The plat has room for tent camping, but this class of trade is not catered to at all. Two of these cabins have private showers and toilets, and although they rent higher than the other cabins, they are usually the first ones taken, and Mr. Gies often has them reserved ahead. All the cabins have excellent kitchen conveniences, and all have Simmons beds and double coil springs.

Laundry trays and shower conveniences of the best are centrally and conveniently located on the grounds. This ground is quite new, but as a result of carefully planned advertising, it enjoys a very flourishing trade.

Within the city itself, in the Hollywood district, is the Lone Star camp ground operated by E. C. Ballinger. Mr. Ballinger has 16 cabins, seven of which are double. The Lone Star camp is situated in what was once intended for a cherry orchard, and the trees provide welcome shade on the hot days.

Then there is the Municipal camp, located on South Winter street. It has six cabins and 10 tenthouses. It boasts a stream on two sides and a large number of oak trees. There is a great deal of room for camping and picnicking, and the grounds are used for this a great deal, especially on holidays. Although it has far fewer cabins than most of the other camps, it has had an exceptionally large number of visitors. Figures for this season give the following numbers of visitors: March, 133; April, 179; May, 352; June 730; and the first five days of July, 143. This is by far the largest number of occupants of any of the camps. Only one of the other camps visited claimed to have full house anywhere near every night, and its number for June was in the region of 200.

Camp owners lay their lack of business to several causes, which it will not be necessary to mention here. Suffice it to say that tourists coming to Salem find good accommodations, perhaps not as luxurious as at some places, but good. It was significant and clearly shown that owners who had really done aggressive work in stimulating trade were the ones that were profiting the most—just as in every other business.

Lytle Says Wild Pea Cause of Stook Deaths

Lupine weed, commonly known as wild pea, probably was responsible for the death of a large number of cattle and a few horses in eastern Oregon recently, according to investigations conducted by Dr. W. H. Lytle, state veterinarian. Most of the losses were confined to Sherman county, the veterinarian said.

Dr. Lytle said that cattle feeding experiments were being conducted at the Moro experiment station to determine the poisonous content of the lupine weed.

The state veterinarian has notified all stockmen who have experienced losses of cattle and horses recently to take their animals off the range pasture and place them on feed or alfalfa hay. Alfalfa hay is a mild antidote for lupine poisoning.
