THE DEMOCRAT CONVENTION MUST NAME A DRY OR COURT DEFEAT"

Streaming across the brilliant editorial page of the New York "American" the headline quoted above was printed July 5, 1924, at the time the Democratic national convention met in New York.

The American is a Democratic newspaper; and therefore the editorial written beneath the headline is of sincere value: "In the selection of a presidential nominee the Democratic party must remember that this nominee must be DRY.

"A wet nominee at Madison Square Garden means a wet blanket for the Democratic party all over the United States.
