WARM DAYS SPEED UP LEMON PRICES

Melons, Too, Take Tip from Hot Weather and Cost-Customers More

In addition to speeding along the growth of some of the many acres of beans, carrots and other vegetables planted in Marion county soil, the hot spell of the past week has done considerable to speed up prices on the best hot weather commodities.

For example, take those lemons with which that good old thirst-quencher, lemonade, is made. At 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon, local wholesalers were informed by wire that lemons would henceforth be quoted at $12 and $13 per crate. That is, henceforth until further notice, when it is expected they will be commanding a maximum of $15 should the current warmth continue. No more cheap lemonade; but who says it isn't worth the money at any price?

Watermelons, too, have taken an advance over last week's prices (thanks to the uncomfortable days, with the best black seeded Klondykes ranging in price from two and three-fourths cents to three cents wholesale, ice cream melons from the same district cost a little more, and ditto casabas and honey dews. Cantaloupes continue to come in a variety of sizes, with the price dependent thereupon.

The tomato market has been particularly affected by the weather, due to the fact that the heavy crop expected on the locals has fallen short because the vegetable was cooked by the sun. This condition has practically drained the California supply with a resultant higher price for both the California and The Dalles crops. This condition, however, is not expected to last long.

The orange prices have not been materially affected by the warm days, perhaps because prices were already plenty high.

CUCUMBER ARRIVAL CALLS FOR RECIPES

With the appearance of pickling cucumbers, there will be a grand hunt for new pickling recipes or for those that were used last year.

Here is one dill pickle recipe: Take medium-sized cucumbers, wash in cold water, then fill quart jars. In each jar put a half cup vinegar, two tablespoons of salt, one tablespoon sugar, a pinch of pickling spices and a tiny bit of dill. Fill with cold water, and seal.

Sweet cucumber pickles may be made as follows:

Cut a dozen large green cucumbers in half inch slices, and soak them in weak salt water for 60 minutes. Make a thick syrup with a small cup of vinegar and a large cup of granulated sugar. Take a piece of muslin and tie in it two teaspoons each of cinnamon and cloves. Boil all to a thick syrup, then drain the cucumbers, rinse them well in cold water and add the syrup. Then set the whole on back of the range and let them simmer for three hours. Sour cucumber pickles which will keep indefinitely, follow this formula:

Wash small cucumbers and sprinkle with salt; cover with cold water, using one cup to salt for each gallon of water; allow to stand 12 to 14 hours; rinse and pack in fruit jars; add green or red peppers, also whole spices; cover with scalding vinegar. These may be stored in an earthen crock, care being taken to keep them under the vinegar. The jar should be covered.
