

MYSTERY VEILS TWO AVIATORS ON FLIGHT

(Continued from page one) standard time, today. No word was received concerning them during the day and this led to the added belief that their compass may have failed them and that they were flying in a great circle. Another possibility was that the fliers turned in a northeasterly direction in order to skirt an extensive storm area.

The plane carried enough gasoline under normal conditions to remain in the air for 56 hours, which would give the fliers until 8:46 a. m. Sunday (Eastern Standard time) before a descent would become necessary.

PARIS, Aug. 4—(AP)—Anxiety for the Polish transatlantic fliers increased tonight with reports of storms and violent squalls over the coast of northern France. Friends of Majors Kubala and Idzikowski refused to believe that the fliers had turned back toward Paris. In any case their retreat would be blocked by adverse weather conditions.

The officials of Le Beauget air field evidently share a widespread view that the positions given by the steamships Aztec and Amakura were inaccurate. The hangars have been closed up and there has been no action to light the revolving beacons.

Much speculation has centered around the Amakura's report that the plane had come from the west and turned northward around the vessel. It has been suggested by aviation experts that the fliers saw the ship from a distance and turned back to show themselves, afterward swing north to resume their course toward Halifax.

Persons most familiar with the plan of the flight and the character of the fliers said that they asked only an even area to the Azores and one chance in five thereafter. The fact that no storm was reported and that the airplane was flying without apparent difficulty has strengthened this argument.

BARON STEUBEN BOOK IS SECURED

(Continued from page 1) that fought to make the United States a free country and a republic. This book only recently came into the possession of Mr. Boise. It came from a relative who has lately passed on.

Baron Friedrich Wilhelm von Steuben was a German of noble birth and high military training who was drawn to the cause of the struggling colonies fighting for their freedom. He came and offered his help.

Congress appointed him instructor general of the continental army, with the rank of major general. He devoted himself to the task of reorganizing the army on the European model. He acquitted himself creditably at Monmouth, in Virginia, and in the siege of Yorktown.

In 1780, he prepared this manual for the army, which came into general use. Its rules are followed yet in those of other armies, and in those of other countries.

After the war, grants of land were voted to Baron Steuben by several states, and congress voted him a tardy annual pension of $2400. He retired to the grant of land near New York, on the present site of Utica in that state. A monument to Baron Steuben has been erected at Utica.

DEMOCRATS FORM THEIR ORGANIZATION

(Continued from page 1) in the November presidential election. The committee unanimously adopted resolutions pledging support to Harvey G. Starkweather for representative in the first congressional district. A resolution attacking Representative Hawley, republican, declared that he favors New England manufacturers over Oregon farmers. Various speakers declared there is more republican defection in Oregon than ever before and that the chances of carrying Oregon for Smith are therefore excellent.

The contest for chairman was three-cornered and spirited. The balloting showed 21 votes for W. C. Culbertson, 7 for L. L. Langley and 2 for Gilbert Hedges. The personnel of the committee was as follows: Baker: William Doby, by John D. Mann, proxy; Benton, H. E. Walter, Corvallis; Clackamas, Al A. FLAPPER ORDERED PUT INTO DISCARD

Velvet, the most feminine of all fabrics, is miles ahead of any other at the leading houses. The newest models, perhaps they are too new for this season, have several other characteristics of clothes of the late Victorian era, including fullness drawn to the back of the skirts and draped into bustles, demure collars, modestly high fronts on evening dresses, but astonishingly low backs.

"Quite demure but not quite dumb," was the summary of an American girl who viewed a collection which had been passed for its first showing before Princess Astrid of Belgium, wife of the crown prince of that country, with her mother and sister. The royal ladies were reported to have been enthusiastic over the winter styles. Winter hats will also have to pre-arrange days. They show a decided reaction toward trimming although they have not reached the stage of birds nests, artificial frills, fancy feathers, bands of short fur and brocade used for bonnets that were hailed in the old-fashioned phrase as "creations."

If anyone doubts that a new woman is being evolved in the Paris dress salons, the doubter should observe the conduct of the mannequins who wear the models. They move more slowly and with a carefully cultivated dignity. A lot of favorite hoydenisms are now registering haute couture. Polse is taking the place of perennials.

Gangster Bullets Not Serious Menace Except To Himself, Indication

CHICAGO, Aug. 4—(AP)—Gangsters' bullets are not a menace to the innocent bystander, for when they kill, they kill each other, a report of the Chicago crime commission said today.

Arthur V. Lashly, director of a special survey of homicides in Cook county, backed the report with figures.

HORGAN NEW HEAD WEATHER BUREAU

John A. Horgan of the Pacific Airplane Service will be the Salem weather observer tomorrow and thereafter, according to word from Edward L. Wells, meteorologist of the Portland bureau.

The local weather bureau instruments, now located on the north bank of the Willamette near the Marion-Polk county bridge, will be moved Monday to the airport under the direction of Charles I. Dague of the Portland office. Dague will also instruct the new observer in the art of weather "forecasting."

This change, Wells states, is made necessary by the inauguration of a new system for supplying air pilots leaving Portland with up-to-the-minute weather information along the airways. Just before each scheduled flight Horgan and other observers along the airways will be called by telephone for weather conditions, it thus being necessary to establish the bureau where the observer may always be reached by telephone.

Reporters Say They Were Attacked When They Filmed Election
