

A Public Service

The New Oregon Statesman and the Portland Telegram believe they are rendering a public service to the people of Salem in combining their delivery system so subscribers will receive the combined news features of two newspapers at little more than the cost of one.

A newspaper is, first of all, a purveyor of news. To the end that subscribers may receive the latest, best and most accurate reports of world happenings the New Oregon Statesman and the Portland Telegram have arranged a combined delivery system whereby the Statesman will be delivered every morning, except Monday, and the Telegram every evening, except Sunday, to subscribers in Salem for only

60c a Month

This distributing arrangement does NOT in any way affect the ownership, management or editorial policies of either newspaper. The New Oregon Statesman and the Portland Telegram are in no way connected in management or associated in activity beyond their common wish to give the newspaper reader complete news service. It is purely a clubbing arrangement such as is used by scores of other newspapers in metropolitan cities.

Subscribers who have been receiving both newspapers under the separate delivery system will now pay only 60c a month instead of 95c a month. Subscribers now receiving the Statesman only may also secure evening delivery of The Telegram by paying only 10c more a month, or subscribers now paying 45c a month for The Telegram alone, may receive both newspapers for 15c additional.
