NEW WILLAMETTE STUDENTS FIND WAYS TO MAKE FRIENDS

Several Carefully Planned Systems For Breaking Social Ice For Freshmen Now Furthered

By WENDELL KEECK

Within two weeks between 200 and 300 new college students will be coming to Salem to enter Willamette university. Many have wondered just what is the process of making them acquainted with one another, with their fellow students who have been at Willamette before, and with the townspeople of Salem.

The Freshman week program, instituted last fall, is a material aid in making these freshmen acquainted with each other. During these days before school work begins they are constantly brought together and are hearing names of one another without introductions.

At Willamette, as at other schools in the west, the campus "Hello" is traditional. Everyone gives everyone else a friendly greeting at every possible occasion, knowing that eventually there will be a chance to find the name that belongs with the face. Men and women, however, are not before introduced themselves to the new men and introduce the new men to each other, and the girls as a rule do likewise.

"Big Sisters" Help

The "big sister" movement among the girls, fostered here by the campus Y. W. C. A., is the most systematic effort made at helping the new girls become acquainted. Miss Anna Mary McKinley, of Joseph, Oregon, is director of the big sister work this year. As the names and addresses of incoming girls are received at the university, they are sent to her and she gives them to junior and senior girls.

These pairs of girls correspond, exchange letters, and do as much as possible to get acquainted before the opening of school. When the new girls come to Salem they are immediately sought out by their big sisters, and are helped in every way possible to become acquainted with other members of their own and other classes. The first Saturday of the school year the big sisters take their freshmen sisters on a hike to "Chestnut Farm" east of Salem, where games and a marsh-mallow roast are enjoyed during the afternoon.

This year in addition to the individual big sisters, there will be six senior girls chosen to be sister to a group of from 10 to 15 girls. Each of these six will be a sort of general information bureau, and will work chiefly during the four days of Freshman week.

With the boys it is different. No such systematic effort is made to help them get acquainted. The fellows who are being "rushed" by fraternities have rather a giddy time until they are pledged to the house of their choice. But the men who are not in this category are usually found in small groups here and there over the campus visiting on subjects of immediate interest. As a rule the men are more forward in meeting each other, introducing themselves and making an effort to get acquainted.

A year ago at registration time over 450 students turned in cards relating to their church affiliations or preference. These cards represented between 80 and 90 per cent of the total registration of the school. Of the cards filed, over 430 indicated either a church membership or preference. Between 15 and 20 denominations were represented, including members of the Roman Catholic church, Christian Scientists, and a large number of Protestant churches.

During the first month of school all Epworth Leagues, Christian Endeavor societies and other young peoples' groups have held parties and receptions in honor of the new students. At these parties an effort is made to introduce as many new students as possible, and these affairs are a big factor in the general process of assimilating the new students.

WHAT THEY THINK

ETHEL MILBURN, who has had considerable to do with reporters at the Marion county child health demonstration, said: "I seldom notice the reporters' pencil and paper. I just think of it as part of their business to use them. It seems to me it is quite business-like."

AUGUST KNUTSON, of the Camera Film shop on Liberty street, said: "Using pencil and paper strikes me as 'bum' idea. People, unless they are used to being interviewed, will talk and talk before pencil and paper appears; but when they see that what they say is going to be written down in black and white, they shut up like clams. They are afraid they are liable to say too much."

C. E. WILSON, manager of the Salem chamber of commerce, said: "Be sure to take this down."

HANDLING MAIL IN SALEM SYSTEMATIC, THOROUGH JOB

Glimpse Behind Scenes At Post Office Brings To Light Some Highly Interesting Facts Of Note

By GENEVIEVE MORGAN

THE public has a way of condemning and condoling its servants, but none perhaps more systematically and foolishly than that twice-a-day individual, the mailman. It's "the mailman forgot to bring me a letter today," or "the postman must have lost that letter," or "the mailman is late," or with a spurt of satisfied glee: "Oh, see what a friend of mine the mailman is!" This last, of course, when the mail carrier leaves a letter, or sometimes better still, a parcel. Or again there is the individual who judges all by a glimpse, and opines he'd like to have "that soft job of handing out a few letters a couple of times a day."

And the mailman goes his busy way, pleasing and displeasing, the contents of his mail bag may dictate.

How Mail is Handled

With such a rattling of type-writer keys and juggling of words, let's get down to the more serious and exacting business of learning something of the working machinery in that grey stone building where we buy stamps and post letters and packages, and from which these mailmen come to bring our messages, good or bad or bills.

The personnel includes: John Farrar, postmaster, who started as a carrier in the Salem office 29 years ago; Arthur Gibbard, assistant postmaster who did his first postoffice work in Traver City, Mich., then in Los Angeles and then in Salem; Edgar B. Baughner, superintendent of mail who started as a clerk in Salem 14 years ago; C. H. Glenn, foreman who has been with the Salem office but two months, but is the oldest member of the staff in point of service; the federal office, having been in some phase of the work for the past 32 years. Then come the 24 clerks and the 23 carriers. That is the mail family, unless one would include the three janitors.
