President Takes Fishing Trip Before Leaving for Washington

SUPERIOR, Wis., Sept. 6.—(AP)—His summer home in a perfect turmoil, with trunks and boxes littering all the rooms, President Coolidge decided to make himself scarce around Cedar Island lodge today and devote one of his last vacation days to more fishing.

With departure for Washington scheduled for early next week, the chief activities at the executive residence and offices were devoted to preparing for the return trip to the capital. These had gone so far that Mr. Coolidge, early this morning, found his fishing tackle laid aside with a heap of other things destined for burial today in a deep trunk, hastily reaching his rod and line, the President summoned his guide and canoe and was off for one of the private lakes on the Cedar Island Lodge estate to fish for trout.

President Coolidge is not contemplating at present appearing in public again before his departure from Wisconsin. Yesterday he attended the local fair where thousands had the opportunity to see him. A last chance will be provided at the station when the chief executive will board his special train for the east. No plans were made up tonight, however, for him to show his appreciation of his vacation among the Wisconsin woods by speaking in public or by receiving local delegations.

Tomorrow Mr. Coolidge will call at his executive offices on his regular Friday routine, to fulfill a number of engagements. E. H. Meyer, a member of the Interstate Commerce commission, who has been vacationing near here, will present his respects to Mr. Coolidge. A. C. Bachus, publisher of the Milwaukee Sentinel, will follow on the same errand, succeeded in turn by various local delegations.

INVESTORS IN OIL WELL LOSE MONEY

Investors in the Guaranty Oil company, promoters of an oil well in Lane county apparently are out $250,000, according to Mark C. McCallister, state corporation commissioner, who has returned here from Eugene where he investigated the affairs of the company and its successor, the Crown Oil company.

It is not likely that the investors will recover any part of the money expended in promoting the project, Mr. McCallister said. The well which was launched by the Rev. David Olson in the year 1922 is being dismantled, and all drilling operations have ceased. The well was sunk to a depth of 3600 feet.

Investigations conducted by Mr. McCallister indicated that a number of the investors mortgaged their homes in order to obtain money with which to purchase stock. The Rev. Mr. Olson now is understood to be promoting oil companies in Montana or Wyoming.

Mr. McCallister also investigated the affairs of the Christian Crusade Stewardship association. As far as he could determine, the association has not made any effort to sell stock in Oregon. Several complaints against the company were filed in the state corporation department.

Property given to the association was deemed to it outright, Mr. McCallister said.

The Earliest Shoes

were shaped like moccasins and were made of rawhide with the hair outside. They covered the whole foot and were fastened about the ankle with thongs.

In sunnier regions the first foot apparel was made of straw, palm, wood, or hide in sandal fashion, and fastened by a thong passing between the big and next toes, and laced about the ankles.

What a difference now! Hold a WALK-OVER in your hand and see how expertly it is made, how carefully every little detail has been attended to. That nicety of workmanship is one reason for the popularity of WALK-OVERS. That's why they wear so long, and keep their shape so well.

Despised Rag Really Has High Value for Humanity

RAGS, "the tail end of nothing to most of us," have come into their own in the healing of broken men.

Their value in keeping hospital patients from brooding over troubles, in restoring deadened muscles to usefulness, and in leading blunted and twisted minds back toward normal interests, is emphasized in a paper by Dr. Eva Louise Zoller, assistant chief aide in occupational therapy in the United States Veterans' hospital at Boise, Idaho, published by the American Occupational Therapy association.

Weaving rags into rugs, with the looms operated either at the bedside or by footpower, she has found, "in every way seems to be the most satisfactory form of occupational therapy for the general medical and surgical cases, as well as the neuropsychiatric cases" in such an institution.

Can Be Simple The rugs can be simple or intricate in pattern and color, she says, and for this reason offer an excellent medium for the exercise of originality by the patients. Further, they are useful and salable and some of the patients have been able to dispose of enough rugs to pay for the wrap used and then supply their homes and friends, developing their pride, self-respect and self-reliance while restoring their muscles to usefulness. In some instances, men discharged from the hospital have been able to buy or make rooms and become partially or wholly self-supporting.

Citing an outstanding case, Dr. Zoller tells of the progress toward rehabilitation made in eight months by a man who was referred to her department with his right arm and hand almost totally paralyzed and his right leg and foot partially disabled. He soon became interested in weaving rugs.

Dozens Woven "He has woven dozens of rugs which he has either sold or given away," she relates. "He is a non-compensable patient, and with the money which he has made from his weaving he has managed to

MODERN CHINA FORGING AHEAD

Dr. Franklin Astonished at Number of Colleges Found in Orient

The large number of colleges in China left a lasting impression with Dr. F. G. Franklin, librarian of Willamette university, who recently returned from a tour of eight weeks in the Orient. That China is making a serious effort to get a position beside the leading nations of the world is clearly to be seen from the accounts of modern improvements in industrial and educational lines, he said.

Paved highways and modern street arrangements are common around and in the foreign sections of the larger cities. Railroads operating on excellent roadbeds, with first class rolling stock and schedules that are adhered to with precision connect the leading ports and inland communities.

Progress Recognized Whenever possible Dr. Franklin's party was made to realize the progress and prosperity of the country along the Chinese coast. Nearly every city of half a million or more the party was entertained at beach resorts having large, modern hotels similar in construction to many in this country.

The greenness of the vegetation was remarked upon by Dr. Franklin as being contradictory to his idea of China. The farmers take two and sometimes three crops a season from the land.

Humidity Assists The high degree of humidity in that region was cited as being the cause, Dr. Franklin mentioned that large drops of moisture would form on the back of his hand as he sat riding in the railway coach.

Many of the leading business men and educators of China have been educated in this country and returned to help modernize the native land.
