SCIO CANNERY TO BE LARGER

Expansion of Plant and Business Predicted by Manager E. K. Leonard

SCIO, Ore., Sept. 27.—(Special)—That the Scio cannery will before long expand into a canning and bottling plant of magnificent proportions, was predicted by E. K. Leonard, manager, on his return from a few days' vacation spent at various Willamette valley points.

There is a trade territory tributary to the local cannery which justifies this optimistic view, Mr. Leonard asserts, and he declares that it is the purpose of the cannery stockholders to develop the plant and business to the greatest extent possible.

Acres Assured "Increased acreage of berries was assured by many farmers holding stock in the cannery company, which is a co-operative concern, who attended the recent meeting of stockholders," Leonard stated.

"The Scio section is admirably adapted to the successful growing of strawberries in particular, and many other varieties of canning berries and vegetables thrive here under ordinary conditions. It is also a splendid vegetable soil, so that a cannery could be busy several months every year."

Seed shipped from Salem is 99 per cent or more clean and is in constant demand in such important markets as New York, Milwaukee, Chicago, Baltimore and Toledo.
