Screen Life in Hollywood

HOLLYWOOD, Cal.—One of the unsung heroes of the movies is the studio publicity man.

It is he who must rush up the heights of enthusiasm to light a bonfire of joy and glad tidings every time a new face is added to the collection of pleasing profiles his company keeps under contract. His too is the task of feeding daily and unrelentingly the flame of public enthusiasm for faces he helped to make famous.

And so it is quite likely that few picturegoers who see the series of one-reel pictures turned out by Sam E. Jacobson, publicity director at Universal, will pause to speculate on the psychological processes back of his determination to produce a group of good motion pictures without leading in any one of them upon the age-old appeal of a pretty face.

That, however, is not likely to interfere with their enjoyment of the baker's dozen of celluloid novelties Jacobson has created.

Meodames David Wright, T. F. Meach, Paul Hauser and R. W. Haas Betts have been appointed as Salem members of the ticket sales committee for the big benefit, "Pandora in Lilac Time," which Nydia temple, Daughters of the Nile, will sponsor at the Portland theatre in Portland October 5, 6 and 7.

Straight From Paris

PARIS, Oct. 2.—(AP)—Coat dresses are to take the place more or less of sport clothes for general wear, says Worth, who shows a silk coat dress trimmed with black shaved lamb. The front of the skirt is semi-circular but the back is plain. A stitched girdle is fastened with a large black and white buckle.

At the Theaters

Drinking, necking and jazz parties are struck a solar-gleux blow in "The Port of Missing Girls," which is the feature attraction at the Oregon theater. The picture deals with college girls and shows what they are doing behind their parents' backs. There is no doubt that it will open the eyes of many parents to present-day conditions and make them keep a closer watch on their daughters. When the young girls see the scenes depicted in this picture, and how seemingly innocent flirtations and pleasures lead to tragedy, they will, perhaps be inclined to "watch their step."

Barbara Bedford and Malcolm McGregor play the leading roles in the film, which was directed by Irving Cummings from a story by

The town marshal said he had seen liquor being put into the automobile.

After the shooting Asher declared he had seen the car stopped on a side street, and that liquor was being placed in the machine. Asher stepped onto the running board, he recited, ordering the driver to get out. He said someone inside the car gave him a push and slammed the door on his hand, and that the car started away.

As the machine gathered speed, Asher declared, he fired at the tires. One bullet passed through the rear curtain, searing the young woman's throat and fatally wounding Litch.
