How many women know the origin of "broadtail," the new fur which Van Raalte is making popular? Broadtail is the skin of unborn lambs and is obtained only by killing both the mother and the lamb. An expensive and almost cruel swathing against the winter cold. However, it is excellent for the buyer who cannot wear the more bulky fur garments.

The ankle sock of the summer has not, as many suppose, turned up its toes and rolled into oblivion. New wool ones, some even with side pompoms, are being introduced by Miller's for wear with sport shoes -chiefly to keep the ankles warm and protect the hose from mud splashes. $1.00, all plain colors, and some tan with figured cuffs.

When we were nine and the War turmoil was bubbling, we saw the last of the peplum as our mother's young friends donned the Red Cross uniform and bequeathed us their clothes to be reworked into jevenile models. Mother made sleeves out of those peplums. This morning three authorities inform the world that the peplum is coming back, subtly and in small versions, but inevitably coming. Although we have not seen a real live model wearing a peplum since the War days, it occurs to us that the woman who is weary of tight and straight fitting hip lines will find this trend a delightful di-

"Three in a row" is the new arrangement for boutennieres. To be more specific, instead of clustering the corsage of real or artificial blossoms, one now treats them as "spray." For instance, three gardenias are not grouped together, but are placed vertically in line, one above the other, on the collar or at the hip-line.

priced at $2.98 per pair and may be had in all sizes. For some reason, the oblong scarfs this season challenge some novel mode of wearing, and in a new advertising service we have discovered the "cat-bow" style, for use with the open-fronted jacket, or sport ensemble. The long scarf is simply tied about the throat with an immense bow in the front, so that it renders a suit front practically superfluous.

For genuine bargains in woolen materials, the Thomas Kay woolen mills should be the mecca of every woman who makes coats or dresses. Here are some of the prices: dress flannels, in a variety of shades, $1.75 and $2.25 per yard; coat material for dress and sport coats, $2.00 to $2.50 per yard.

small purse and the smart desire, there comes a bit of good news from Paris openings in the fact that Regny and Martial and Armand are sponsoring the black crepe. Of course, the styles are different; the firm hipline, the hescarfed throat, or the sash which is concentrated in the middle of the front like a Cleopatra girdle will do wonders for last year's frock. A pair of the new black crepe pumps, which are being shown in Saleme will give the air of intentional chic.

All-occasion frocks in a wide range of sizes, are offered by the La Bette shop, in the Oregon Theater Building at $9.75 and $14.75.

A book of which one hears so much these days, but cannot obtain anywhere, is "Dostovesky," by Julius Meier-Graefe. German critic who has devoted years to the study of this real character in history. "Doto-vesky" is an artist, quite ordinary until the Czar exiles him to Siberia where, by force of heart-breaking confinement, he is changed. The forces which would have broken any other man, make Dostovesky a great subject for what is said to be a great book.

The newest style of table service and table arrangement will be demonstrated by Miss Hammond, of New York, at Gabledorf's on Court street, between Commercial and High, from Nov. 3 to 8.

"Hat-heel" is being introduced as the new practical heel for hose. It extends only one and a half inches above the shoe line and is not more than an inch wide. This petite patch on the back of a chiffon hose is positively bewitching, especially above French heels.
