

GIRL HURT BADLY IN FALL FROM BAR

CENTRAL HOWELL, Ore., Nov. 3.—(Special) — Emmaline Nafziger, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Nafziger, fell from the chimney bar at school last week, breaking one arm and slightly spraining the other.

G. J. Darkens has moved from his home in North Howell to his new home on A. Weisner's place in Central Howell. Mr. Darkens is a carpenter and has been employed by Albert Mikelson, building his new barn.

Ray Blinagar, who lives in Polk county, but whose former home was in Central Howell, is plowing for different farmers in this community with his Holt tractor.

Electricity is now assured to a number of Central Howell residents. Work is to begin at once on a line to run from Central Howell south to Pratum. A substation is to be put in and residents in other parts of the community are hoping the line will be extended in other directions.

A number of new cars have been bought in this neighborhood. E. Herr and A. A. Kuenzi, both have new Chevrolet sedans.

Halloween pranks did little damage in this community. Verne Van Cleave's mail box was moved into the road where it was run into by a car. Otherwise there was little evidence that anyone was out.

The teachers and pupils scrubbed the schoolhouse on Thursday night, preparatory to having it oiled over the week end. Edward Ped and Alpheus Rudishauser, who are the janitors, will do the oiling.

The road crew is now at work widening the road at the Simmons corner. This is going to be a needed improvement as the corner has been a difficult one for many cars to make. It has been nothing unusual to see a car in the ditch there.

The school children had a delightful spooky time at the Halloween party, planned by their teachers, Mrs. Martin and Mrs. Hillficker, on Wednesday afternoon. Many games were played and prizes awarded the winners and the trip through ghostland where ghosts, goblins and witches reigned, was so realistic that it was too much for some of the smaller ones who had to be rescued.

Joe Kaer has suffered the loss of a number of sheep from some unknown cause. About a dozen of his ewes died in the pasture where they were being kept.

Parents Invited To Visit School

"Come to School Day" will be observed Wednesday, November 7 at the Washington school. At this time, all the patrons are most cordially invited to visit their school. Monday is to be given over to the Marion Child Health Clinic. They are giving the physical examination to pupils in the first and fifth grades. It will be greatly to the parents' advantage to be present when their child is examined.

GIRL GIVES GRANDMOTHER INSIDE DOPE ON FOOTBALL

Reporter Writes Graphic Account of Game and Some Other Interesting Phases of Life at College

DEAR Grandma—I know you think football games are worse than bull fights and that young girls shouldn't go to them. But times have changed, Granny dear.

And besides, the girls here at college say you just don't rate if you won't go to football games and such things. While I don't understand just exactly what they mean (I'd never dare admit that to anyone but you) I can see that rating is a terribly important part of college life.

You remember that Red Farmer used to read about making such a big hit in one of those eastern colleges? Well, it was football he played, and it was football we saw today.

I don't know whether I was most thrilled over the crowds and crowds of people that packed what we call the stadium—it's like a great big soup tureen with the football field or griddle iron as they call it sometimes right down in the center of everything—or with the players all dressed in those funny tight-fitting rigs we used to laugh so much about and those caps like the janitor at Roll's store always wears. Well, the caps aren't just exactly like his, they are brown and instead of sitting on top of the ears, they come way down over them, and are heavier made and made of leather. I think Neil said.

Cheer Leaders Funny Another thing that I looked so much at was the yell leaders. These fellows, each school has several of them, get down in front of the rooting sections and yell and yell and wave their hands about and every once in a while they jump right up in the air like they'd been sitting on something hot, or sometimes they whirl themselves right over and over along the ground in front of the sections. The rooting sections are not at all like those out in our back yard; they are just parts of the grandstand from which the students sit and look at the game and watch the yell leader to see what he is going to do next. Oh yes, and the yell leaders all wear white clothes, even including pants and if they don't fit so nicely they'd look almost like those pajamas we made for Grandpa last Christmas.

I went to the game with the jolliest lot of girls. All the girls go to the games together but that's about the only place they stick together so well. They say something about every boy that sits with a girl at a game being a "pigger" and it seems like piggers aren't nice things to be. When the students start pouring (they do pour, almost), every once in a while there is an extra big commotion and a group of great big men run up the rows of boards and grab some boy that has been sitting by a girl. Meanwhile, everyone in sight, it seems like, starts yelling and shouting pigger, pigger, pigger.

Girls Know Football I started to tell you about the girls I went with. Sue Rose, who was the one I sat by, looks just like one of those good Victorian girls you are always wishing for, but the girls all say she knows more football than some of the men on the field. Now, don't be horrified, Granny, 'cause you know this is an age when girls know just as much about things as boys and men and almost every girl I know here has some kind of sport or game that she just plays and plays and plays. Some of them play tennis, some golf, some basketball and Neil says they'd play football if the suits weren't so ugly. Neil says, too, that her favorite game is pigging, but I haven't seen that played yet. Sue Rose told me she so much about football while the game was going on that I knew all about it when it was all over, even if I didn't know anything at all before.

Well, Granny, of course I saw lots more things at the game, but I'm just too sleepy to tell you about them now, but one thing I know, I'm not going to miss any more games.

Your tired FRESHMAN SALLY P. S.—Neil just read this, and she said piggers were all right; it just means that a boy has gotten the college traditions and sat with a girl during the game. It seems they want all the boys to root at the games. I guess that's why they call it pigger. Sue read this too, and she said she enjoyed the game was jolly good fun for me—at least. She said it sorta funny, so I didn't get exactly what she meant, but I know it's all right.
