

LET'S LIVE! MILDRED LAMB

READ THIS FIRST: Several disturbing elements had already entered the list of Byrd Hamilton, who had just married the arrogant, irresistible, Larry Brown. They were spending the night at the Elks club, at the Elks club, where Larry's friends, who had come to attend the wedding, were giving a party in their honor. When the party had reached a high pitch in the crowded room, Byrd found that this fast-moving crowd had no interest for her. When she discovered India Campbell, a former sweetheart of Larry's, and Larry sitting down on a window sill before an open window, they misinterpreted her anxiety as jealousy. Byrd was relieved to be rid of Larry's gay friends, but her peace of mind was short lived. She was disturbed and overwrought at the comely magnificence of the green velvet notes at White Sulphur Springs, where they arrived for their honeymoon. Byrd struggled to conceal her surprise and shock over the prices of rooms, meals, and especially Larry's extravagance in choosing an entire outfit for her, particularly when Larry ridiculed her economics as being old-fashioned. Larry was slightly bored with Mr. Progress Polk, a friend of the first National Bank of Cleveland. (NOW GO ON TO CHAPTER X)

MR. POLK'S eyes followed Larry as he left them. He seemed to be straining after some fleeting memory that proved as illusive as retreating a path in a vanished dream. They sat down and talked. Byrd told him about her two summers in her father's bank, and how she loved it. "Well, my dear," said Mr. Polk, as he was leaving, "come and see us after you're settled. Then he added, making a great joke out of it: "If you ever want a job give us the first chance. With your banking experience we'll make you our twenty-first vice president!" Byrd laughed and they shook hands.

"Would you care if I played a little bridge tonight, dear?" asked Larry. "These men need a fourth, and I agreed to help out as a favor. I'll be up around eleven. Sure you don't care?"

"Positively, Mr. Sheahan. I'll sit around here a while, and then I'll go and get undressed and read in bed," said Byrd.

Byrd woke up as Larry opened the door. She had fallen asleep reading. "Why, chucky, it's after eleven, isn't it?" Byrd asked, sleepily.

"Pretty nearly three," Larry answered with a yawn. "Gosh-nuthy, I sure got dragged into something, believe me! Darn fool that I am!"

Byrd was wide awake now and looked frightened. "Oh, Larry, you frighten me when you talk like that. Quick, tell me what's happened! Were you sandbagged or something?"

Larry came over and rubbed his cheek against the smooth, satiny skin of her bare shoulder. "I'm just a boob," said Larry. "No, they didn't take it at the end of a pistol. I wish they had and I could have reported it to the police."

"What are you talking about?" demanded Byrd. "Well, curiosity shop, it was like this. Larry seemed to have some difficulty with his memory, and Byrd knew suddenly that he had been drinking. We started playing bridge, and I cleaned up good and plenty. Then they suggested that we go over and watch them play roulette at the White House. Quite a showplace."

"But, Larry, you wouldn't gamble, would you?" said Byrd, with little twinkles etched darkly between her eyebrows. "Never, with my own money, sweet, but this was their money, and they gave me permission. In fact, they urged me to spend their money," answered Larry, plausibly. "How much did you lose?"

asked Byrd, fearfully, turning her face to the wall. "Just their money and not a cent of my own," replied Larry, firmly. "And believe me, that's my last trip to the little joint!"

"You've learned your lesson, haven't you, ducky dear?" said Byrd, teasingly. "I'll tell the world, sweetums!"

As Larry stood by his dresser pulling off his collar and tie, he took out his bill book, surreptitiously, and with some rapid figuring he estimated that he had lost about five hundred dollars. He stood tapping his pencil against the dresser.

"Larry," said Byrd, sitting straight up in bed. "I wish you'd wire that check dad gave us up to Mr. Polk's bank. It'll please him."

"Good suggestion!" said Larry, cheerfully. "You can sign the check right now. We may forget it in the morning."

And Byrd crossed the check. But it was not sent to Mr. Polk's bank. Several weeks later, Larry and Byrd were settled in their furnished apartment, consisting of three rooms and bath, in the Corvado Manor.

The Corvado was a new, fashionable apartment hotel that overlooked Wade park, a beautiful location just twenty minutes from the downtown section.

"Had to pay a month's rent, two hundred and fifty five dollars, just to hold it for us," said Larry at the breakfast table one morning.

"That seems an awful big rent for just three rooms, doesn't it?" inquired Byrd. In a way, Byrd had gotten used to the high cost of living. At any rate, she managed not to gasp out loud at the mention of the cost of things. But she still gasped inwardly.

"In the city, you have to pay for the privilege of being comfortable," said Larry. "Gee, won't all your friends in Jacksonville envy you for not having any housework to do?"

The kitchenette and breakfast alcove were too small for cooking and serving dinners, so Larry decided they'd eat their evening meal in the apartment dining room.

Byrd's eyes drifted out of the wide window opposite for a second, and a misty, wistful light shone through them. Then she resolutely turned to the making of toast.

"Everything's so convenient too, why, it doesn't take a minute, hardly, to get our breakfast." Byrd gave all the credit to the appliances with which the kitchen was equipped.

"Twins" to Marry

Jessica Hart Trogen, above, and William Hart Furness, both 27, of Camden, N. J., who believed themselves twins until recently, are so fond of each other they have decided to marry. William was adopted at an early age by Jessica's parents and they died without telling the children they were not related. The two made the discovery when the old friend of the Harts apprised them of the fact.

RAT MENACE REAL BULLETIN STATES

With the rat population of the United States estimated at 120,000,000 or one rat per person, the United States Public Health service has just issued a bulletin on the rat menace. The bulletin was released Tuesday from the Marion county health demonstration center.

Depredations of rats annually cost the people of the United States approximately $200,000,000 for food consumed and a like amount more for losses sustained through the wanton destructiveness of the animal, reads the bulletin.

If the extraordinarily prolific breeding of rats was not controlled by disease, natural enemies and the cannibalistic tendencies of the animal itself, the world might be over-run and man himself forced to fight a losing battle, the paper states. Man must become familiar with the habits of living and breeding of the rat and study methods of combat.

Direct measures of attack have but limited results in hands of the public. Trapping with snap or cage traps, poison baits, the aggression of dogs, cats, ferrets and snakes, fumigation with poisonous gases are all used, but with the exception of trapping, are not recommended to the inexperienced householder. Suppressive measures universally prosecuted will be the only means of effective destruction, the public health officer asserts. The most effective suppressive measure is to separate the rat from its customary food supply in every place where food is handled.

The public service commission Tuesday granted the application of Mountain States Power company to waive statutory notice in giving reductions of 10 per cent in commercial lighting rates.

The reductions will affect consumers at Barview, Bay City, Brighton, Cloverdale, Garibaldi, Hebo, Nehalem, Netarts, Manzanita, Oceanside, Pacific City, Rockaway, Tillamook and Wheeler.

The Paisley Electric company has filed a new residence lighting rate giving a reduction of approximately 9 per cent. The Paisley Electric company serves Paisley and adjacent rural territory.

HUBBARD, Ore., Nov. 13.—(Special)—George Grimps, Chief of the Hubbard fire department, attended a meeting of the firemen at Molalla Monday evening. The state fire warden met with the firemen.

PORTLAND, Ore., Nov. 14.—(AP)—Two little Japanese children were saved from burning to death today when fire destroyed their home. The father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. K. Nakamura, were working in a field nearby when they saw smoke coming from the windows.

(AP)—Aimee McPherson, who

no intention of cutting it short out of the new investigation in Los Angeles concerning her disappearance.

It had been suggested in some quarters that she cancel her fare-advice and promised England a

"novel experience" in her first
