take to cook it and get it on the table," he asked, irritably.

Byrd was unwrapping her purchases. Larry, standing moodily near the kitchen table, noticed at once that the vegetables looked wilted, and the meat had a tainted smell. They had been standing in the hall all day.

"I'll hurry as fast as I can," said Byrd, with fingers that fairly flew.

"Looks like a nice mess of food 'Not for me! I've told you that, we're better off in the end if we took our dinners in the dining room, and this proves it."

Without a word, he took his hat and went out of the door.

Byrd ran down the corridor after him, thinking she might still persuade him to come back. But he was gone.
