CANDIED, DRIED FRUITS OFFERED

All thoughts now for Christmas. At least so it would seem from the thorough way in which such staple commodities as carrots and beans and cabbages have disappeared from the Salem store windows to make way for package after package of tempting candied fruits, attractively wrapped in glazed paper, not to mention the varieties of candies and nuts also put forth.

Candied fruits range from the plain old prune to black figs, white figs, pineapples, cherries and apricots and one would be surprised at the percentage that are prepared right here in Oregon. The prices? Well, they are various and pretty well expensive, although of course it depends upon the kind of fruit and the style of pack.

Dried fruits, too, are prominently displayed this week, and may be purchased in box lots of about 10 pounds, as well as in lesser amounts.

Fancy Italian prunes are two pounds for 19 cents. Dates run about two pounds for 25 cents for the bulk ones, and higher for the pitted and boxed offerings.

Popcorn is also taking a larger share of the display space, and sells in the neighborhood of three pounds for 25 cents.

Fresh fruits are scarce, as usual at this time of year, the Emperor grape offerings are somewhat plentiful at three pounds for 25 cents. Cranberries continue at 20 cents a pound, generally speaking.

Oranges, the navel variety, are offered in more sizes than for some time. A medium size runs about 50 cents a dozen, with the larger ones 65 cents and better. A small fancy orange costs 29 cents a dozen, or thereabouts.

Florida grapefruit is more plentiful, though the demand has not picked up materially. These are two for 25 cents.

Lemons have been fairly steady, the stores selling them at 35 and 39 cents a dozen for a good grade.

The apple situation is unchanged, with all varieties cheap. Fancy grades may be had for 39 cents a dozen. As low as 59 cents a box is the price on the poorer grades of local apples. The average box costs around $1.20.

The vegetable market has been practically unchanged this week, with supplies good and prices steady, though up from pre-holiday weeks.

LET'S LIVE! MILDRED LAMB

READ THIS FIRST:

Byrd and Larry Browning, madly in love with each other, were so different in temperament that you could almost with the first notes of the wedding march that they couldn't possibly make a "go" of their marriage.

Byrd, clinging to her old-fashioned ideals of children, a home of their own, mutual love, consideration and forebearance, was opposed by Larry, who wanted life to be exciting, colorful and stimulating. He was the gay center of a crowd composed of Tiny and Fred Overman, fat, generous and speedy.

Jack Dunnean, a shrew, who fell madly in love with all beautiful women, including Byrd, and his neglected wife, Margy, who filled her life with the care of her three little children and her home; Chet Overman, an ambitious young banker, who proved a friend in need to Byrd, and India Campbell, a former sweetheart of Larry's, a modern Cleopatra, who still held him in her toils.

Under Jack's unscrupulous leadership, Larry and he had gone heavily into debt, floating the stock of the Builders' Supply company, hoping to make large profits with little labor. Larry's winning personality and charm had brought him president of the Jacksonville Savings and Loan company.

Byrd's worries were increasing, for, in spite of the economy that he forced her to practice, Larry, himself, was becoming more extravagant, and her mild criticisms precipitated quarrels of unusual bitterness and disastrous consequences. One night Larry walked out of the apartment after a disagreement, and took India to a dance. They met about much later. She worried over the succession of parties that Larry gave, any one of which cost more than their entire month's grocery bill, counting the cost of articles which India occasionally smashed and the liquor that was consumed. But she worried most of all because Larry continually upbraided her with her puritanism. Try as she would, she couldn't go the pace of this crowd.

Their financial difficulties became acute. Byrd appealed to Chet for a small loan until the savings account arrived which her father was sending her. Chet was now cashier at a branch of the First National, and a person of growing importance. One day, after borrowing some money from the reluctant Chet, on the grounds of their long friendship, Larry resorted to arguments not entirely based on facts, and succeeded in selling Chet stock in the Builders' Supply company against Chet's better judgment.

One night at dinner, during a half-whispered telephone conversation, Larry agreed to pay India's bills incurred by their automobile accident. Larry's temper, aggravated by Byrd's criticism of his conduct with India, and by the growing discomfort of a badly-twisted knee, gave way, and a scene resulted in which Larry again warned Byrd that she'd have to change her ideas.

Another loan arrived from her father, along with a sum of money to be invested, according to an earlier recommendation from Larry, in stock of the Acme Axle, but Byrd suspected that the entire amount went to apply to the mounting expenses of the Builders' Supply.

In spite of their many quarrels over expenditures, Larry insisted on giving one "whopping" party for the crowd. Byrd, determined to overlook India's failings, shopped with her and Tiny, eager to buy new gowns for the affair.
