

OLD VINTAGE CARS TO VIE

"Horseless Carriage" Listed For Contest Involving Original Equipment

DETROIT—(AP)—While motor car manufacturers are showing the buying public—and those who "just look"—their latest creations at the New York automobile show January 5 to 12, in a class by itself will be an automobile produced in the early days of the industry, seeking high honors at the show.

The National Automobile chamber of commerce is seeking through a nation-wide contest, to find the car built prior to 1900 still in the most perfect state of preservation and able to establish the fact that its parts are all its own.

"Steamers" Expected
In determining the winner of the contest, original equipment will be the first consideration, with age next in order in judging. Sponsors of the contest anticipate some interesting early day models of the automobile industry, including "steamers" as well as gasoline propelled "horseless carriages". In specifying that the car must antedate 1900, the chamber of commerce has gone back to the period before the real "market" for automobiles came into existence.

No Accessories
The specification of "original" equipment also holds promise of sharp contrast with present-day models. There will be no self-starters, no disc wheels or demountable rims; there will be no electric lights and no electric horns. The winning model in all probability will resemble a buggy on bicycle wheels, and quite likely it will be cranked from the side—if it happens to be a gasoline-driven vehicle.

Yet it may be a "steamer." In this event there may be a bit of delay in demonstrating its state of perfection while the boiler is filled with water and the required 200 pounds of steam generated within.

Diet and Health

By Lulu Hunt Peters, M.D.
Author of "Diet and Health" and "Diet for Children"

WOMAN'S HYGIENIC PRINCIPLES BRAND HER AS MILD MANIAC

I AM considered as a mild sort of maniac by my neighbors because I watch my children carefully to see that they do not play with children who have running noses or who cough. When my children have a cold, they are not permitted to mingle with others and have been instructed to use tissue napkins instead of handkerchiefs and discard them into the toilet as soon as used, instead of carrying germ-laden handkerchiefs in their pockets to re-infect themselves and others. My methods have usually prevented the spread of colds to the rest of the family, and the cold rarely lasts longer than a day or two. And colds are a rare thing in my family, too. I think I am cautious, but my neighbors ridicule me and tell me that if the child is destined (I hate that word!) to have a cold, it will get it, but not through mingling with others.

"One mother told me that when one of her children had scarlet fever, the other played with her, and, although she later sent the child away, it had not been necessary since the child never caught it. She believed that it was because it was not destined to catch it. Won't you please write on the contagion of colds, whooping cough and measles, and please expose that ancient hokum of warding off all ills by wearing a camphor bag? In these days of enlightenment isn't it amazing to find so many who still cling to ancient fallacies?" MRS. S.

Keep right on with your program, Mrs. S., and don't worry because your neighbors consider you a mild maniac. You are demonstrating that you are getting good results, and sooner or later you will find that you are educating your neighbors as well.

deno, and other false reasoning. Your neighbor, for instance, noticed that her child played with another child ill with scarlet fever and didn't get it, and she attributes it to predestination, not knowing that certain children, at times, anyway, may be immune to certain diseases. For instance, some children are immune to diphtheria. (This can be determined by what is known as the Shick test.)

There are certain diseases that do leave a more or less permanent resistance or immunity to that same disease. For instance, it is rare for one to have smallpox or typhoid fever twice, but it can happen.

It's a criminal fallacy to expose children to any contagious diseases, with the idea that they are destined to have them anyway, and that the earlier the better. Children are not destined to have these diseases, and if they do have them, the later the better, for the younger the child is the more severe the contagion is apt to be.

The camphor bag delusion and other such methods of warding off diseases will eventually give way. But probably not in this generation, for it is only by the education in hygiene that the children are getting and will be getting in the public schools, that will be generally effective.

We have a list of books on the general care and feeding of children which you may have, Mrs. S. Editor's Note: Dr. Peters cannot diagnose, nor give personal advice. Your questions, if of general interest, will be answered in the column, in turn. Requests for articles must be accompanied by a fully self-addressed, stamped envelope and 2 cents in coin for each article, to cover cost of printing and handling. For the pamphlet on reducing and gaining, 10 cents in coin, with fully self-addressed, stamped envelope, must be enclosed. Address Dr. Peters, in care of this paper.

Herbert Hoover is touring the Central and South American points on a good will mission and for the purpose of learning more about our Latin American neighbors. The trip will prove a fine thing for Mr. Hoover and his country, and is one of the best bits of work done by a president-elect in many years. Leave it to Hoover.—Union Republican.

A California Bungalow of Unusual Appeal

THE CORONADO—DESIGN NO. 204

BUNGALOWS of the so-called California type are almost always attractive. They carry an indefinable atmosphere of the Spanish architecture even when the native designers make no special effort to provide it.

This bungalow is one of that sort. It hasn't the flat sprawling roof that usually identifies the type, but the arched doorway to the entrance porch and the rough textured walls instantly bring into the mind's eye those old missions that are about all that is left in Southern California of the handiwork of the Spanish masons of nearly three hundred years ago.

And when you glance at the floor plan it is emphasized all the more. Here is the inescapable zig-zag layout with the patio in the rear and the adjacent broad, covered living porch that becomes a spot of endless delight in the summer evenings when the flowers are at their best and the play of the fountain lulls one into ecstatic drowsiness. For the patio, to fulfill its mission, should have both the fountain and the flowers, the latter in great variety.

Like all real California bungalows, this one has no basement and likewise lacks a heating system. It is peculiarly a warm climate home, and if built in the North must be provided with a heating plant. The fireplace nook off the living room is the one spot that may be comfortable in case of an unusual cold snap.

The interior arrangement is most convenient and living and dining room can be made virtually one room when so desired. While the kitchen may seem oddly placed at first glance, the more you study the plan the more it appeals. The bedroom and bath arrangement complete a very comfortable home for a small family, one that is easily within the reach of the average man.

The Common Brick Manufacturers' Association, Cleveland, Ohio, can furnish complete drawings for this design. Letter on brick construction sent upon request.
