

Loughran And Mandell Voted Year's Brightest Fight Stars

New York Newspaper Has Sport Experts Pick Best Boxers in Ring for 1928

NEW YORK, Dec. 24.—(AP)—The worst champions of them all in the boxing world are Tommy Loughran and Sammy Mandell, in the light of the final ranking of leaders of the various weight divisions for 1928 which is published by the New York Sun.

Loughran not only heads his own light heavyweight kingdom by a good margin in the Sun's consensus, compiled each year from the votes of 60 newspaper boxing writers in various cities, but his name also tops the leaders in the other classes in the points which reflect the favor of the critics.

The boxing adonis from Philadelphia tallied a total of 596 points out of a possible 600, ten points being awarded for each first place rating. Next in line is Sammy Mandell, light weight champion, with 591, while Mickey Walker, middleweight king, is third with 586. Next in order came Tod Morgan, junior lightweight; Izzy Schwartz, flyweight; Jimmy McLarnin, junior welterweight; Jackie Fields, welterweight; Jack Sharkey, heavyweight; Fidel La Barba, bantamweight; and Benny Bass, featherweight.

In the list of ten, three champions were overthrown by the consensus. Andre Routsis, featherweight titleholder, running second to Bass; Much Callahan being succeeded by McLarnin among the junior welterweights; and the inactive Joe Dundee being crowded off the top of the welterweight division by Javvie Fields of Los Angeles.

Sharkey rolled up the highest point total among the heavyweights although Jack Dempsey had the most votes for first and second places.

A showing comparable to that of Loughran is impressiveness was made by Mandell, cat-like champion of the 135-pounders, as he had a longer lead over the No. 2 man in his division than any other leaders enjoyed, Joe Gluck being second but far behind. Loughran had the next biggest margin with Leo Lomski rated as second best in the light heavy class.

GOOSE GOSLIN AMERICAN LEAGUE BATTING CHAMPION

IT'S a hard bit to swallow when the batting championship of a major league has been taken away from you. But that's practically what has happened to Heinie Manush, heavy hitter of the St. Louis Browns.

Upon completion of the American league season Manush was generally recognized as the American league's leading hitter, with Leon "Goose" Goslin, of the Washington Senators, second. But when the American league's official statistics were made known recently, the figures were reversed and Goslin was enthroned as the 1928 batting champion. He won the race on his last time at bat in the final game of the season with a double that brought his average to .379, one point above Manush.

It was the closest finish in the American league since Ty Cobb, of the Detroit Tigers, with an average of .395, nosed out Nap Lajoie, of the Cleveland "Naps," by one point in their memorable race in 1920.

Goslin's performance was remarkable for the fact that he was handicapped during the whole season with a lame arm. At times he could throw the ball no farther than 50 feet. He had to hit at a terrific clip to offset this weakness in his defense, and he did.

ALL WORKOUTS TO BE SECRET

Both California and Georgia Tech Remain Aloof in Preparing for Tilt

PASADENA, Calif., Dec. 24.—(AP)—Football workouts of California and Georgia Tech, in preparation for the New Year's day football clash at the Rose Bowl, will be shrouded in secrecy hereafter.

Newspaper men got their first and last glimpse of Georgia Tech's ramblin' wreck in action today, when Coach Bill Alexander held open house, and the scribes got a look at the Yellow Jackets. The Tech mentor declared after the workout that practice from today will be conducted in secrecy.

Coach "Nibs" Price of California, likewise issued the ultimatum. The Bear mentor barred all press of tournament park and denied entrance even to former California students at the afternoon workout.

Newspaper men will be barred from both the California and Georgia Tech workouts. The Bears will continue their two workouts a day program at Tournament park, Price said. The Golden Tornado of Georgia Tech is slated to work once daily at Patterson field, Eagle Rock, Calif.

The Georgia Tech squad looked impressive in its workout at the Rose Bowl today, although the session was brief and confined to practice intended to remove the kinks accumulated in the long train journey from the south. After several minutes of calisthenics, the Yellow Jackets went through punting and passing practice, with Mital and Randolph featuring. A spell of dummy scrimmage followed.

INDIAN SQUAD WILL PLAY OREGON CITY

CHEMAWA, Ore., Dec. 24.—(Special)—When the Chemawa Indian school trots off the floor

Thursday evening after its game with Oregon City high, something more or less authentic can be said of the potential power of the Redskins this season.

The Indians will go into this game with hardly two weeks of actual practice, training having been interrupted frequently by illness of the coach and players. Coach Downie has been confined to his bed with influenza during the past week and at no time since practice started has the whole team been out to practice at one time.

George Meachem has been out for a week now. He is a husky guard with one year's experience, is a great help now that he is in suit again. Jim Spencer, another experienced player, is back in school and strengthens Chemawa's outlook considerably.
