Fight at Sea is Rumored Ashore

PALM BEACH, Fla., Jan. 5.—(AP)—Heavy firing heard at sea near Jacksonville and the failure of coast guard vessel 294 to report to its base at Fort Lauderdale caused fears that the vessel had got the worst of it in an encounter with rum runners, but it turned out that the 294 was merely sinking a confiscated rum runner. STAR KEEPS PLAY RECORD CLEAN

PLANE YET FLYING
WHEN DAY NEARS

(Continued from Page 1.) Record after record has been overtaken and thrust aside since the huge Fokker left the ground more than four and a half days ago, and the last existing records for sustained flight were tumbling from the skies tonight.

Just before darkness settled over the valley, the Question Mark returned from a swing down the coast to San Diego, was refueled, and settled down for a long night to be spent in great 30-minute circles over its home port. During the night the refueling planes were to contact with it twice, at 9:30 p. m. and 1 a. m., feeding the stout-hearted motors 180 gallons of gasoline each time. At daybreak 250 gallons more were to be taken aboard through the hose lines in preparation for perhaps another flight to San Diego.

Crew Still Feels In Excellent Spirits

As the number of hours grew, the spirits of the Question Mark's crew rose with them. "Strange as it may seem," read an entry by Lieutenant Elwood R. Quesada one of the big Fokker's pilots, in the plane's log dropped at the airport tonight. "The longer we stay up the longer we want to. If everything keeps on I don't expect we'll ever want to come down."

As the plane overhauled the last official and unofficial air records tonight, officers in charge of the flight arrangements began to ask themselves if the Question Mark ever would come down.
