Anti-War Pact is Signed By U. S. President and Put Away in Official Archives

By RICHARD L. TURNER Associated Press staff writer WASHINGTON, Jan. 17.—(AP)—Bearing the signature of President Coolidge, a brief but portentous document reposed tonight in the archives of the state department to attest that the United States has given its full and unconditional approval to the Kellogg treaty for the renunciation of war.

The paper, known officially as the instrument of ratification, was signed today by the chief executive in the midst of ceremonies imposing in their simplicity, and surrounded by an atmosphere of solemnity befitting the supreme importance which Mr. Coolidge attaches to the pact.

Whole Cabinet There In the historic east room of the White House, had gathered the entire cabinet, high officials of the state department, and more than one-third of the membership of the senate. They looked on as the president signed his name to the instrument, passed it to Secretary Kellogg for certification of his signature and then followed the same course with a duplicate of the document.

To America fell the distinction of being the first of the fifteen original signatory nations to ratify the pact, but before it can become effective it must be approved.

Senators Kuck, Bell and Collier and Representatives Stewart and Potter will inspect the Oregon state hospital in Salem.

A committee composed of Senators Strayer and Reynolds and Representatives Norvell, Smith and Stewart will inspect the state tuberculosis hospital here.

Other investigating committees follow:

Home for feeble minded—Senators Elliott, Reynolds and Kiddle and Representatives Johnson and Norvell. This committee also will inspect the state industrial school for girls.

Boys Training school—Senators Jones, Collier and Elliott and Representatives Rushlight and Weatherspoon.

Blind school—Senators Mann, Kuck and Staples and Representative Stewart. This committee also will inspect the deaf school.

The committee to investigate all claims presented to the legislature is composed of Senators Strayer and Collier and Representative Angell. The public service commission investigation will be conducted by a committee composed of Senators Bell and Strayer and Representatives Angell and Rushlight.

By the fourteen other powers in the manner prescribed by their respective constitutions, and their own instruments of ratification must be deposited with the Washington government, which is custodian of the original treaty. When this has been accomplished, exchange copies of the pact will be signed by each of the fifteen states.

Senators Invited Responding to the invitation of President Coolidge, the senators gathered at the White House shortly before 10 o'clock and were escorted to the east room where they awaited the coming of the chief executive. A few minutes after the hour, the doors were thrown open and Mr. Coolidge, with Vice-President Dawes at his side, preceded by his military and naval aides and followed by the cabinet officers, entered the room.

The president seated himself at an old colonial table, around which had gathered the cabinet of every president from John Adams to Theodore Roosevelt. Vice-President Dawes was at the president's right and Secretary Kellogg sat at his left, while the senators grouped themselves just in the rear. Behind the president stood Chairman Borah of the senate foreign relations committee, who guided the pact along its storm-beaten path through the senate. Senator Moses of New Hampshire and Senator Gingham of Connecticut, who had insisted that an interpretative resolution accompany ratification of the treaty, were among the spectators.

Many Cameras Click Brilliant calcium lights were turned on and motion pictures. Cameras ground away as the president dipped his pen and began inscribing his signature on the instrument of ratification. When he had finished he handed the paper and the pen to Secretary Kellogg, who attached his name as a witness to the validity of the president's signature. In the same manner, the second copy was quickly signed by both. The gold pen presented to Secretary Kellogg by the city of Havre, at the time he visited France last summer to sign the treaty, was used today in signing the document.

While the president was affixing his signature, Mrs. Coolidge and Mrs. Kellogg appeared at the doorway and remained as interested spectators until the ceremony was completed. The dignity of the situation, however, had no awing effect upon "Tiny Tim," the ginger-colored Chow which of all the White House dogs, is Mrs. Coolidge's favorite. Eluding his mistress he trotted across the room to the desk and held his position there until a secret service agent coaxed him away.

Of the two copies of the document which were signed today, one is deposited with the original treaty of America's instrument of ratification, while the other will remain in the state department archives to attest that with the consent of the senate, the pact has been ratified by the president.
