SEVENTY-EIGHTH YEAR, NO. 270

Salem, Oregon, Thursday Morning, February 7, 1929

Attacks on Measure Come From Only One Source: Unfair, Claimed

Associations Also Protest Upon Proposed Change In Supervision

The excise tax bill, as H. B. 279 has already come to be known. underwent its first test by fire Wednesday night at a public hearing in the senate chambers. At this meeting, however, only one enemy jumped into the fray, but this opponent landed with both feet. Led by O. C. Boggs, head of a mutual building and loan association of Medford, mutual association men rallied in declaring that article B, section 8, which attempts to set an interest rate for mutual associations above which profits should be computed for tax purposes, was unfair to smaller companies. They based their claim upon the fact that mutual associations in Portland can obtain their funds for 5 and 6 per cent. while the Medford and companies of similar size must offer 7 and 8. Franchise Tax Is Substitute Proposal

Answering this plea it was tween Eugene and Corvallis, pointed out that if this section were stricken out, the mutual associations would pay excise tax on earnings put into surplus funds (Turn to Page 10, Column 4.)
