Second Deficiency Bill Goes to Senate Minus Prohibition Clause

WASHINGTON, Feb. 25.—(AP)—The second deficiency bill weathered the prohibition storm in the house today and was sent to the senate with the presidential recommendations safely embodied in the $194,600,000 supply measure.

Immediately after the house, by a vote of 239 to 125 had placed its mark of approval on the bill, the signal was given that it would face a period of rough weather in the senate similar to that encountered in the house.

Senator Harris, democrat, Georgia, served notice that when the measure was taken up in the senate he would offer again the $24,000,000 prohibition amendment that led to the death in conference of the first deficiency bill. The second measure carries most of the items that were incorporated in that bill.

Item Rejected Twice
The $24,000,000 proposal twice was rejected by the house, once when the amendment was offered by a roll call vote to send the bill back to the appropriations committee to increase the huge amount in the measure.

As the legislation goes to the senate it carries the $2,727,000 recommendation for prohibition that was transmitted to congress last week by President Coolidge. This fund would be distributed among the department of justice, customs bureau, prohibition bureau, and civil service commission to carry on the activities relating to enforcement of the dry laws.

Bourbon Ranks Split
On impenetrable cordon of republican votes protected the presidential recommendations from the time the measure was taken up in the house.

Although the southern democrats stood firmly behind the larger figure throughout the struggle, they lost the support of most of the New York and other eastern democrats who threw their support to the republicans to defeat the proposal.

There were half a dozen amendments to increase the amount before the house finished with the bill. Most of these were offered by democrats but one, to provide $200,000,000 for enforcement, was proposed by Representative Laguardia, a New York republican who ranged himself alongside the democrats.

Investigation Planned
Among its various items the measure includes an amendment sponsored by Representative Crampton, republican, Michigan, to provide $250,000 for an investigation of the operations of the prohibition law. The sum would enable President-elect Hoover to carry out his campaign promise that such an investigation would be made.

In addition the bill among other provisions carries $75,000,000 for tax refunds. This item was sharply contested in the house during consideration of the first deficiency bill. The measure also carries $17,299,000 to pay the salary increases granted government employees under the Welch act which was passed last session.

Well, Weather Was Not So Bad Shows Summary

Salem's weather in January was not as forbidding as some residents would have eastern friends believe according to a report made locally through the chamber of commerce weekly bulletin. Total rainfall for the month was only 2.5 inches, there were eight clear days, nine partly clear days, 10 cloudy days and only four foggy days. Maximum temperature for the month was 50 degrees above zero and the minimum was 14 degrees above zero.

President-elect Herbert Hoover on the first day of field experience with surveying instruments, while studying engineering at Leland Stanford University in 1906. Mr. Hoover is the student sitting at the left. Others in this squad are: Arthur Diggins, in the very collared derby, standing behind Hoover; R. B. McDonnell, in the "gray slouch" straw hat and business like attitude at the tripod, and James White, sitting at the right, with notebook and pencil and pleasant expression. It was Mr. Diggins who suggested on this momentous occasion that the squad have their pictures taken, with the laughing remark, "Some day one of us may be famous." All four of the squad became engineers of high attainments—and one of them did become famous. Through the courtesy of C. A. Averill of Miami and Mr. McDonnell, now a successful engineer in Kansas City, The Herald is able to present this reminiscence of the beginning of a career which will culminate in the White House. The youthful engineer at the left front of this unusual picture is now resting at the winter home of J. C. Penney, Belle Isle, Fla., for the arduous duties ahead.—Photograph through the courtesy of Miami Herald.

SMALLPOX CARRIED BY PORTLAND PAIR

PORTLAND, Feb. 25.—(AP)—Charged with having spread from 13 to 20 cases of smallpox in Portland, Mr. and Mrs. Roy Hayes were being sought by police today.

The two escaped from their home today as Dr. Harold C. Averill, assistant city health officer, entered to investigate the situation. Dr. Averill quarantined the home several days ago when it was discovered that a number of persons living there were ill with the disease. Today, just as he arrived at the house, Roy Hayes drove up in his automobile. His wife, Velma, went out the back door and the couple drove away.

Mrs. Hayes who had just recovered, officers say, worked in a restaurant while ill. Hayes is believed to be "breaking out" with the disease now. He has been working at a factory.

Educators to Find Out How They Might Have Done More Effective Job With Class

George W. Hug, superintendent of schools, and J. C. Nelson, principal of the Salem high school, were in a group of more than 30 Oregon high school principals and superintendents chosen to cooperate with the Oregon State college faculty in "humanizing education" during the sixth annual Educational exposition at the weekend. This group will interview freshmen students from their high schools to find out how the college could have done more for the students. To Give Real Help Principals studied the progress of the freshmen since entering Oregon State college and will question them in order to make constructive suggestions to guide the college faculty in helping students in the future. The results, which will be primarily individual, are expected to be helpful in handling the problems of the student body as a whole.

"This step is linked with, but is supplementary to the vocational guidance program of the Educational exposition," explained E. B. Lemon, college registrar. Getting a man into the right field of endeavor is the main purpose of the exposition, but this program aims to do the most possible for the student after he is in his chosen field.

Columbia Association Forms to Obtain Navigation on Development

PORTLAND, Ore., Feb. 25.—(AP)—The Columbia River Valley association came into being here today after 200 representatives of cities in Oregon, Washington and Idaho, tributary to the Columbia river, expressed belief that the river can become the major traffic artery of the western United States.

Actual organization of the association was reached when a board of directors of 18 persons was elected with power to choose the president and other officers. A committee on constitution and by-laws and another on finances were appointed.

The chief talk of the day was given by Colonel G. R. Lukesh, government engineer, Portland, who said the federal government was not inclined to make more improvements on the river until it is used to its actual capacity. He urged use of the river to show what can be done.

Farm Leader Speaks
H. R. Richards, The Dalles, Ore., president of the Farmers Union, corroborated Lukesh's opinion, speakers admitted the river "as an artery was anemic" and reminded the delegates that at one time the Columbia river was to be opened from the Canadian border to Portland.

Eleven directors of the Vancouver, Wash. chamber of commerce, attended and promised every support. Paul Heatherton, Longview, Wash., acted as spokesman for that city and told of the recent port developments.

Frank L. Shull, president of the Portland chamber of commerce, compared conditions on the river with 20 years ago. He spoke of the national administration's faith in inland waterways and expressed himself as being certain government aid could be obtained.

Directors Selected
The board of directors is made up of the following:

F. L. Shull, Drake O'Reilly, J. C. Ainsworth, O. L. Price, P. L. Jackson and Henry Reed, all Portland; John Langdon, Walla Walla; James E. Akey, Pendleton; H. R. Richards, The Dalles; F. R. Brown, Vancouver; B. F. Stone, Astoria; Wesley Vandercock, Longview; E. A. Cook, Lewiston; A. C. Dixon, Eugene; Truman Butler, Hood River; M. J. Crabb, Clatskanie, Wash.; W. S. Aimee McPherson May Not be Star Witness Against Judge Hardy

SACRAMENTO, Feb. 25.—(AP)—The impeachment trial of Superior Judge Carlos S. Hardy of Los Angeles bids fair to be conducted without the presence of Mrs. Aimee Sempie McPherson, evangelist, from whom receipt of a $2500 check initiated charges of misdemeanor in office against the jurist.

Members of the assembly investigating committee who now constitute the board of managers to prosecute Judge Hardy believe that Mrs. McPherson's presence at the trial here might be unnecessary. Walter J. Little of Long Beach, chairman of the board, declared tonight.

Little said that although members of the board were not unanimous, the majority felt that testimony taken from Mrs. McPherson during the committee's investigation in Los Angeles would be sufficient at the trial.

"Ma" Kennedy Wanted
The board would like to have Mrs. Minnie Kennedy, mother of Mrs. McPherson, here to question Little said, or, if that cannot be arranged, a deposition from her probably would clarify several points relating to financial transactions of Angelus temple.

The investigating committee always felt that Mrs. Kennedy would be of value to it," Little declared. "Inasmuch as she was the financial manager of the church she undoubtedly could explain several details that have not been satisfactorily explained."

Mrs. Kennedy is in Portland. It is considered unlikely that she will be brought to Sacramento if she did not desire to come. On the other hand the senate may ob-
