

DEMURRER IS FILED IN INJUNCTION SUIT

A demurrer was filed Monday afternoon in behalf of Oregon legislators in the injunction suit brought against them by W. A. Jones, grange member, farmer and taxpayer.

It is expected that no answer will be filed, since the entire suit is based on legal interpretation which will be brought up for decision on demurrer.

Whichever side loses before Judge McMahon will appeal immediately to the supreme court, it has been indicated.

Attorneys representing the legislators recently requested that the suit be dismissed in the circuit court so that mandamus proceedings could be filed in the supreme court.

The names of two attorneys in addition to I. H. Van Winkle, attorney general, are signed to a demurrer.

Other Ross of Silverton and Salem represents the plaintiff.

HIT-RUN MOTORISTS SENTENCED TO JAIL

PORTLAND, Ore., Mar. 11.—(AP)—Five dental school students, found guilty of being "hit and run" motorists, were fined $100 and given five days in jail today.

The quintet, Thomas Van Alstyne, Vancouver, Wash.; Victor Taylor, Homer W. Gorman, C. C. Bowen and John N. Herron, were said to have struck Bech Patton, December 14, knocked him unconscious and then left him in a nearby service station.

Bech Patton, victim of the "hit and run" episode, was graduated from Willamette university in June and is well known in Salem both among students and townspeople.

65 ELK SEEK WAY TO ESCAPE STORM

No less than 65 elk were in a herd which took refuge near the Walla Walla Veterans' hospital during recent cold weather according to Carl B. Tallman, business manager of the institution.

Mr. Tallman was in Salem Saturday to visit his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Wells Tallman. Nine of the men were rounded up into the veterans' yard where the soldiers could see them but ignoring the high fences, over which they jumped, the visitors made their escape.

Carl B. Tallman who also lives in Walla Walla, will be here for some time to visit his parents.

Six Men Drown When Bucket is Sent Into River

CHARLESTON, W. Va., Mar. 11.

Passed Up THE STORY OF A GIRL WHO MADE MEN LIKE HER

By ROE FULKERSON © 1929

Office afternoon he came into the office and threw his hat up against the ceiling. "I hooked him, Betty! I hooked him!" he exclaimed, excitedly.

"The architect?" she asked, as excited as he was.

"I'll tell the world I did! The letter you sent him about the added comforts to the tenants sold him and the owner, both! That means you get more money, Betty!"

CHAPTER XLVII THE position in Mr. Smith's office proved the first that Betty had in leaving his office routine.

He showed her his small book-keeping, no more than his personal cash account and office overhead. All the goods he sold were shipped and billed direct, so he had none of this detail.

His rooms were from commissions, however, she had to keep a careful check on the orders he sent out to be sure he received this. His bank books were in bad shape, as he was careless with his additions. Ordinarily he was in the office for only an hour in the morning, and again in the afternoon.

From time to time he telephoned in to see if there was any business, and always began: "Watchman, what of the night?" Betty soon learned the names of his customers, and how to handle their telephone communications and keep them in a good humor.

Her Mr. Smith was "Jimmy" to the trade, so she soon got into the habit of thinking of him in this way. In a couple of months she had the details of his business at her finger tips.

One day a woman called at the office. She was about 20, much painted and powdered, and with a tired air which permeated even her drawing, complaining voice.

"You seem to do everything else," "I'm sorry," answered Betty, "but of course I can't sign Mr. Smith's name to a check. He always calls me on the telephone at 12 o'clock. If you will tell him I can put you in touch with him."

"Always calls you at 12:00 o'clock?" asked Mrs. Smith, bridling.

"Yes, ma'am. It saves him a trip to the office. I tell him what telephone calls come in from the customers and any other business details since he left in the morning."

"Thank you, Mrs. Smith. I don't suppose he ever noticed it. Not many people think so."

"Mrs. Smith went out without saying good morning, leaving Betty happy that she did not call on her. She had heard Mr. Smith say the little about his wife, and suspected he cared even less about her. She did not see how so merry and pleasant a soul could be interested in a woman of Mrs. Smith's type. Betty felt sorry for him.

When he came in at the end of the day she told him several details of the business and finished up with "Mrs. Smith was in this morning."

"Wanted money, I suppose." He spoke gloomily.

"She did say she wanted some money. She suggested that I give it to her," smiled Betty.

"Oh, she is like that! Doesn't care who gives her money." He laughed grimly.

Betty grudgingly the subject to business. She did not care to become involved in a conversation with her employer about domestic matters.

Mr. Smith had been working hard to get an architect to redo the two things he had in the apartment figured for a month on the project, and brought every influence he could bear on the man.

—(AP)—Six men at work on a new bridge across the Kanawha river here drowned today while crossing the stream in a cable bucket. A post to which the cable was attached broke, and the six occupants were thrown into the swiftly running water.

75 Men Get Jobs Through Bureau; More Work Ready

Registrations dropped at the United States employment agency here this week while demands for help increased according to the report made Saturday by C. A. Kells. Ninety-six sought to obtain work while 75 people made inquiries of the bureau for workers.

Of the 75 men referred to jobs, 72 were successful in obtaining them.

"You choose between that woman and me right now!" Mrs. Smith pointed at Betty tragically. "He need not." The tears came to Betty's eyes in spite of herself. "I am going now, and will not come back. I am so sorry." As she pushed past Jimmy Smith and went through the door, she heard him say: "Oh, damn! She went home sadly, and sitting down to her little typewriter wrote him to be impossible for her to come back under the circumstances, and how much she regretted the incident. The following afternoon she had a reply which told her how much too regretted the whole affair, and enclosing a most flattering recommendation, in which he said he would be glad to be called by any one interested.

Betty sobbed herself to sleep that night. Again, she thought girlishly, she had danced and paid. (TO BE CONTINUED)
