

LANDRITH HERE FOR C. E. TALK

Behavior and Life Work Discussed by Christian Endeavor Worker

"Some folks are doing things in society that I would advise in some kinds of dances today that I think nobody who is not a monkey should dance, but that does not mean that I disapprove altogether of all society and all society. Society as a means to an end is all right, but society as an end in itself is poor education," said Dr. Ira Landrith speaking Wednesday night to a group of Christian Endeavorers in the auditorium of the First Christian church.

Dr. Landrith took as his text the remark which Mary made to the servants who waited upon Jesus at the wedding feast, "Whatever he sayeth unto you do it," and with this as a starting point from which he made many little journeys, outlined a theme of Christian Endeavor.

"Young people will vote right when they get right. . . . The church of Jesus Christ cannot afford to play partisan politics for any candidate who stands for anything opposing any one of the Ten Commandments," thus the speaker hastily sketched his views on politics, adding humorous personal little incidents which were greatly enjoyed by the audience.

Choice Outlined

"Do not choose a life work without consulting Christ, and whatever he sayeth unto you do it." It is possible to make a living and lose a life. There are many ministers today making a mess of law and I have no doubt that there are many lawyers making a mess of preaching. God calls people, I believe, to be faithful deacons, lawyers, merchants, doctors—He calls men to all necessary and honorable work, but, young man, be sure that you hear the call!

"The International Society of Christian Endeavor is the greatest organization for peace in the world—peace not only among nations, but among churches as well."

Convention Soon

Dr. Landrith urged that Marion county people and especially Salem people take an interest in the state Christian Endeavor convention which will be held in this city in April. "As an aid in choosing a life task, in furthering desire for education, and in developing leadership among young people nothing greater can be found. Salem has had dozens of conventions which will not be worth one-tenth to her what this convention can be."

Previous to the main speech of the evening, rally talks were given by James Henderson, president of the state Christian Endeavor union; Viola Ogden, secretary of that group; and the Rev. Mr. Gilmer, field secretary in Oregon.

Dr. Landrith is citizenship superintendent of the International Society of Christian Endeavor and was for a number of years president of Ward-Belmont college. In 1916 he was candidate for the vice presidency of the United States; he has been an active worker for prohibition and is especially interested in the civic reforms which Christian Endeavor organizations throughout the world are sponsoring. His address Wednesday night was the culmination of a five-days speaking tour throughout Oregon.

islands are prosperous and better satisfied than they have been for a long time. He said the Moros seem contented under a new American governor recently appointed for Jolo province. He sees nothing to complain about in the restrictive lands laws which limit the acreage which foreigners, including Americans, may own or lease. He is more concerned with tariff prospects.

Tariff Barrier Is Strongly Opposed

"Creation of a tariff barrier between the United States and the Philippines would be contrary to the enlightened modern policy which calls for free trade between the mother country and its dependencies," Stimson said. And he gave his interviewers the right to assume that he would use his influence to prevent such tariff restrictions. This would apply to restriction of the amount of sugar which the islands are now exporting to America.

On the subject of a governor-general to succeed him the secretary-to-be was likewise silent. Persons close to him, however, were of the opinion that he may have considerable to say about the appointment of a successor as he, of course, has considerable interest in the matter.

Governor-General Stimson left later in the day for Washington. The only item on his program here was a private luncheon. He was accompanied by Mrs. Stimson, his sister, Miss C. Stimson, Captain E. A. Miller. The party was welcomed by a large delegation of prominent officials and citizens headed by Major James Rolph, Jr.

Monte Blue comes to Bligh's Capitol today for a run of three days in his second Vitaphone picture, Warner Bros. "The Greyhound Limited" in which he plays the part of a railroad engineer.

The engineer rooms and boards with the mother of his fireman. Both men are in a way intrigued by the mother's attitude. The fireman's quick lunch counter along the tracks. The fireman's mother begs Monte to alienate the girl from her son. He does so reluctantly and the enraged fireman takes to drink, later being blamed by a gang of thugs for the murder of the saloon keeper in whose place he hangs out.

The noose is about to claim the lad when through thrilling adventures with thieves, on runaway trains, in hills and thickets, Monte finally finds the real culprit and rescues the girl. The girl goes her own way and the old friendship is restored between the two men who form the crew of the "Greyhound Limited."

Vitaphone is effective with voices of players, and with sounds that mark the progress of the speed melodrama, as well as in symphonic accompaniment.

The cast includes Edna Murphy, Grant Withers, Lucy Beaumont and many more. Monte Blue, son of an engineer, and an ex-railroader, gives a magnificent portrayal of the unpretentious hero of "The Greyhound Limited."

Vitaphone vaudeville acts and the Fox Movietone News will complete this bill to play the Capitol all through the rest of this week.

GRAND OLD MAN OF WAR PASSES

Field Marshal Foch Called by Death After Long and Lingered Illness

when the government here cabled to the French ambassador in London to notify Great Britain of his passing.

The news of the death spread rapidly and great personages immediately began to arrive at the Foch residence to register their regrets and condolences. Marshal Petain came first, to second Foch in death as he had done in life. Marshal Lyautey and Generals Nessel, Gouraud and Weygand were there for the army before the first civilian dignitary appeared.

Widow Bears Grief With Great Dignity

The widow, although deeply moved, was very dignified and Spartan in her grief. When told by the doctors that the last moment of her glorious husband was at hand, she exclaimed simply: "God's will be done."

This evening she received many of her friends and admirers of the great soldier whose companion she had been for so many years.

One of the first to express feelings over the passing of the marshal was General John J. Pershing, the marshal's friend and comrade. The American soldier said that Foch would be "mourned not only by the French nation, but all peoples whose armies fought under his leadership in the World war."

Men of Humble Station Present

But not all who came were marshals, generals, presidents, or prime ministers. Humble men appeared, some wearing caps and many collars and wearing linen which was almost redolent of the trench life of ten years ago. There were wooden legged and armless men of erect bearing in the crowd that filled the dimly lit Rue Fenelle and extended well into the Invalides square, under the dome of which the marshal is to find his last resting place.

Those Polish spokes in hushed tones as they passed the residence. Some made the sign of the cross; others merely lifted hats or caps, but all were said.

Patient Begins Day Greatly Improved

The marshal awoke this morning much refreshed and greatly improved as compared with yesterday. He appeared to have rallied from a heart attack which he suffered Monday evening. He talked cheerfully with his doctors.

Suddenly there was a change in his face, twitching. He placed his hand on his heart, lay down on the bed and spoke no more.

The world had known that the end of the great soldier was not far off. Yet when he died there came a throb of sorrow that encompassed the hearts of all men. With his passing the greatest of all wars disappeared.

A small man, a frail man, Marshal Foch in his last fight displayed those qualities of grimness, of determination, of the will to win that distinguished him through all his years, from youth to gallant old age. He was in his 73rd year when he died.

From day to day over the more than two months of his illness, the marshal had scoffed at his doctors, made light of his ailments, denounced the ministrations of his attendants and spoke cheerily of his future plans—plans linked closely with past campaigns and war maps.

But the ebb and flow had been too constant to foster hope of recovery, and soon it became evident that now it was a matter of hours only. Doctors summoned to the bedside made their final examination. The marshal's two daughters were there, and his wife, coming tearfully into the room, was gently told that the marshal's hour had come.

A priest from Saint Clotilde church administered extreme unction. Emerging from the house, he sadly remarked:

"I have just experienced the greatest emotion of my life."

Premier Poincare informed the chamber of deputies of the loss France had sustained.

"Gentlemen," he said, "Marshal Foch is dead. A great soldier and a great Frenchman is gone."

STATE SOLONS PUT GOV. JOHNSTON OUT

Ladies' Show on This Afternoon At Theatre Here

The senate vote today came as a dramatic climax to more than two years of political turbulence, which reached its peak late in 1927. At that time, however, Johnston succeeded in dispersing hostile legislators by court action after they had sought to convene on their own call.

Much of the fire against the Johnston administration centered on Mrs. O. O. Hammonds, whom he had established as his confidential secretary immediately after her inauguration in January 1927. Declaring that the attack on Mrs. Hammonds and his administration was inspired by "disappointed political spinsters," Johnston steadfastly refused to resign her.

Resignation Of His Secretary Explained

After he was suspended from office and shortly before his impeachment trial opened, Johnston accepted Mrs. Hammonds' resignation. On the witness stand he explained that he had resigned previously to dispense with Mrs. Hammonds' services because rumors had been circulated by his political enemies that his personal relations with the woman secretary were improper. This charge, made in a purported impeachment article voted by the attempted session in 1927, was not renewed by the present session, and for this reason, Johnston said, he felt justified in accepting Mrs. Hammonds' resignation.

He admitted pleasant conversations with Foreign Secretary C. T. Wang of China, who in Shanghai and with Premier Tanaka of Japan while in Tokyo, but these meetings he pointed out, were private and not official. That they may have bearing on future dealings with those countries was to be taken for granted about Mexico and Nicaragua, the latter of which he visited as President Coolidge's personal envoy just before going to the Philippines, he used a sample of the diplomacy he may be expected to practice later on and smilingly asked for other topics.

Speaks But Briefly About Prohibition

A reference to prohibition brought another smile, but he did discuss it briefly as it affects the Philippines. In the United States the Jones law, which is a liquor act in the Philippines the Jones law is the organic act of the islands. Under it, Stimson said, the Filipinos regulate many of their domestic problems, including the question of liquor. And this, he said, does not seem to be much of a problem.

"The Filipinos are a most temperate people," the governor-general said. "In fact in the year I was out there I never saw an intoxicated Filipino."

Colonel Stimson believes the
