ant hit him in the jaw and then stabbed him.

The only tilt between the state and the defense on introduction of evidence came when the prosecution called Sheriff E. J. Newton who identified the knife alleged to have been used by Bryant. Newton testified regarding statements made by the defendant the night of the encounter.

Confession Improperly Obtained, Is Claimed

Defense attorneys objected on the grounds that the alleged confession was not obtained properly, but Judge Skisworth ruled that the state had given prima facie evidence properly. The knife as identified was admitted to the jury. It is a heavy pointed weapon.

Bryant took the stand as the first defense witness and gave testimony in a low voice while nervously folding and unfolding his hands. From his testimony, the defense attempted to show that he was still engaged to Miss Trozell the night she was being taken home by Dickerson and that such a relationship had not terminated following his return from Aberdeen, Wash., earlier in the fall, as Miss Trozell testified earlier in the day.

Defendant Says Knives Were Used to Cut Fies

He also denied ever having said that two knives were to be used to "split somebody's back" but were used instead to cut pies and cakes taken on picnics across the river with other men friends. He declared another picnic was contemplated the night of the stabbing and that Miss Trozell understood he was to take her.

Many Stumbling Blocks Encountered

When cross examined savagely by Clarke on this point, Bryant admitted he didn't know definitely where the party was to be held. Testimony concerning the encounter, Bryant said no words passed before Dickerson hit at him but directors the agreement was made. Through a day of prolonged discussion and many committee meetings the producers presented their case, and a stumbling block were many, but the result was that almost all of the American and foreign producers of crude oil in the western hemisphere would curtail from April 1, so that 1929 production, which thus far exceeds by about 170,000 barrels a day the daily output of last year, would not be greater than 1928 when 897,816,793 barrels were produced for an average daily supply of 2,453,951.

WORLD OUTPUT RADICALLY CUT

Serious Over-Production is Faced by Operators in United States

All the producers at the meeting agreed to curtail, but where and how much the cut would be were details left in the hands of five regional committees to determine. These committees will govern production in the Pacific coast region, interior United States, Mexico and northern South America, the Atlantic coast states and Louisiana, Arkansas and Texas. The Atlantic coast and the Gulf states formerly were in one committee.

Needed Legislation

Is To Be Sought

A general committee was authorized to ascertain what legislation is necessary to make the curtailment program practical, although some states already have enacted or have pending legislation governing production. The committee also was asked to study whether it would be desirable to encourage the same degree of restriction and conservation on the part of the foreign fields as of our own.

President Reeser of the institute said he expected 50 per cent of the proposed reduction would be realized by April 1, with the curtailment fully achieved by July 1.

Reeser said he anticipated advance in the price of gasoline at this time, although he indicated his confidence that the industry would recover from the "over production and uneconomical competition" which he indicated have kept the trade's return on investment at 3 1/2 per cent for several years.

ments reaching the government, rebel leaders said.

General Escobar's forces, including a large command of cavalry, the "Yankee Doodle" squad of American airmen. R. H. Polk of Tennessee heads the group which is said to include three other flyers from the United States.

Troop Movements

Made in Secret

Movements of General Escobar's troops were not disclosed in the official dispatches from Jimenez, announced here by revolt leaders, nor was any revelation made as to the discussion over the telegraph wires between the rebel chieftains and his chief lieutenants.

The only message received from the front disclosed here was one from General Escobar addressed to General Marcelino M. Murrieta, Juarez commandant, reiterating the intention of the rebel leader to direct an advance on Mexico City.

The message said that 7,000 men in the Bajal region of Guajuato were preparing for a march toward the national capital to sever Calles' communication with the government. The dispatch also was expected to be continuing their attack for control of Mazatlan, west coast seaport.

Insurgent forces still occupy Colima and Manzanillo, on the west coast, the message said, and Guadalajara was reported to be menaced constantly by the rebels. Juarez was quiet. The daily train from Jimenez, however, which was scheduled to arrive at 3 p. m. came into the city 3 hours late. No reason was given.

STORMY PETREL OF SENATE IN SALEM

Bennett Makes Short Tour in Interest of His Candidacy

The public demands more vigorous, more progressive leadership—younger men in its public offices is the opinion of Senator J. E. Bennett of Portland, visitor in Salem Wednesday. Bennett is the first applicant for the job of governor from the people at the next primary. He announced his candidacy at the close of the last session of the legislature.

Bennett says his platform will be his record in the 1925 legislature where he was a representative and in the 1927 session when he was a senator.

Always in Minority

"My policy when I was in the minority has been to make such a strong fight that the public would note it and force a bill to pass when it reached the house or through the governor's veto."

Bennett is in the wholesale and retail meat business on Yamhill street in Portland. He is politics because he feels the people want aggressive leadership. He is going to win the nomination in 1930, he believes.

LIVING CONDITIONS INFLUENCE INDUSTRY

New Plants' First Look Into City's Facilities for Worker's Homes

Living conditions are being investigated more than ever before in connection with the establishment of industries, and it is incumbent upon every community to improve living conditions if it hopes to attract new payrolls. Dr. Edward Lee Russell of the Marion county child health demonstration said in an address at the Rotary club luncheon Wednesday.

Dr. Russell pointed to Steubenville, O., as a city which was eliminated from consideration by persons establishing a monster industry, simply because its infant death rate was unusually high. This was due, he said, principally to lethargy of Steubenville citizens in the matters of sanitation and health education.

Some of the things which the present day individual demands before he decides to make his home in any community, were enumerated.

It is believed possible that the foreign office in Paris will await more details from the complete reports of the incident which have been mailed to the embassy by the consul.

Canadian Legation Examines Evidence

Meanwhile the Canadian legation has begun the unravelling of the points at issue which have been raised unofficially. The first reports from British Consul Henry Tom at New Orleans were received by the Canadian legation today. Since much of the case, if pressed by the Canadians, will revolve around the single question of just how far the I'm Alone was from shore when first hailed by the guard vessel Wolcott, the Canadians from their reports tried first to learn the position of the I'm Alone.

The reports, it was said at the legation, were obscure on the subject as previous unofficial reports. The consul's report reiterated that the position, as contended by the captain of the I'm Alone, was between 14 and 15 miles off the American coast and not, as contained by the I'm Alone, within the 12 mile limit as set by American statutes, which is not recognized by international law.
