Manufactured Value of Product for Year Is Over $100,000,000

Oregon stands second among states in lumber production, according to a report prepared by the state forestry department. The 1928 cut was 4,126,000,000 feet board measure. The manufactured value of this lumber exceeded $100,000,000. A total of 47,000 persons were employed by the industry, representing 65 per cent of the state's industrial payroll.

Forest industries and standing timber pay approximately one-third of the taxes in Oregon. In some countles timber pays as high as 75 per cent of the taxes, and in other counties more than 50 per cent.

The report said that in favorable locations Douglas fir stumpage has sold for $4 per thousand board feet. Western yellow pine stumpage in the Klamath district has sold for more than $8 per thousand board feet, In New England, white pine stumpage has sold for more than $20 per thousand board feet. Thirty years ago white pine stumpage could be bought for less than $4 per thousand and Douglas fir for about 10 cents per thousand.

Forest experts estimate that a thousand feet of saw tmiber can be grown in western Oregon on land seeded by nature for not more than $7. Non-agricultural lands covered by second growth have a decided future value. Fire Great Enemy

"Fire is a great enemy of sec-ond growth timber," read the re-"In the United States there are 240,000,000 acres of cut over land. Fire burns over from 8 to 10 million acres of this land annually. Oregon contributes its share in this needless destruction.

"Oregon has a little state forest of 77,000 acres. This is which decorated with Easter lilies, jon-ginning of something which decorated with Easter lilies, jon-should develop eventually into a qiuls, and rabbits. Covers were full grown forest, that will be placed for Misses Beryl Blosser, worthy of the largest forest state guardian, Ruby Crittenden, Again the union." For the same period the per capita consumption of lumber was reckoned at 305 board feet.

Using Timber Fast "The people of the United Sta are using their timber four times as fast as growth replaces it," continued the report, "European countries cut no more each year than they grow. In the United States there is an ample area of land, good for nothing except to grow trees, to produce the timber we need for all purposes, for all time. The unproductive part of this area should be put to work growing trees.

"About three-fourths of the total present stand of timber, including the best and most accessible, is in private ownership. Less than one-fourth is included in the national forests. The remainder, about three per cent, is owned by states and municipalities."

Oregon has approximately 395, 800 million feet of timber. This is more than one-fifth of the remaining stand in the United
