

DISCOURTESY OF COPS IS DENIED

Search of Clubman's Yacht Told About by Official U. S. Agent

NEW YORK, April 3.—(AP)—Officials of the customs enforcement bureau acknowledged today that Stuyvesant Fish's yacht, "Restless," had been boarded and searched for liquor by an inspector from a customs patrol boat, but denied that there had been any discourtesy.

Fish, a wealthy sportsman and broker, complained to Washington that men he believed to be members of the coast guard half of his yacht near the Statue of Liberty by firing their revolvers and then one of the men searched the "Restless" while others pointed their pistols at Fish and his family.

At first the coast guard, the customs and the marine police all denied knowledge of the incident but shortly after Rear Admiral Billard of the coast guard arrived from Washington to make an investigation the customs bureau announced that it had been learned a customs boat had been the one to stop the yacht.

Deputy Collector of Customs McGill, who made the announcement, said pistols were fired in the air when Fish failed to stop on a whistled signal, but that after that there was no gun display. He said the boat was stopped because it was a new boat in the harbor and a fast craft such as it is sometimes used to run liquor.

McGill said Fish showed no displeasure during the search and exchanged courtesies with the inspector who searched the boat and after finding nothing permitted the "Restless" to proceed.

Inquiry Started Into Dry Republican's Wet Record

NEW YORK, April 3.—(AP)—The customs collector in New York, his assistant and the two inspectors who reported that representative William M. Morgan of Ohio, dry republican, brought four bottles of liquor into the country from Panama were called today at the start of a federal inquiry into the incident.

No details of what Philip Eiting, collector of the port, Henry C. Stuart, assistant collector, and Inspectors L. E. Crawford and James McCabe told U. S. Attorney Charles H. Tuttle, who is conducting the inquiry behind closed doors, were available as the investigation opened. But the assumption was that they reiterated the inspectors' story that Morgan had brought in the liquor last week after receiving freedom of the

TRANSPORTATION IN DISTRICTS STUDIED

All but one of the 11 high school districts in the county have submitted plans and other data on transportation of pupils from outside districts, County Superintendent Mary L. Fulkerson, secretary of the boundary board, reported Tuesday.

Following a recent meeting of the boundary board with members of the school districts from the southern part of the county relative to new state transportation requirements, the board asked all high school districts in the county to submit data concerning transportation. Under the new laws, the boundary board is given supervision of the transportation of high school students from territory outside of high school districts, and through this ruling is bound to avoid as far as possible a conflict of routes.

The new law does not go into effect until the opening of the new school year. However, it is expected the boundary board will consider the data now on hand as early as possible that districts may be guided by any changes that are made in hiring the new corps of teachers.
