Best Word On Business Told Rotary

"How's business?" The answer to this frequent question is extremely indicative as to the place which the answerer holds and will hold in the business world, Perry B. Arnold, salesmanship expert told members of the Salem Rotary club at their Wednesday noon luncheon.

If the answer is "bad and getting worse," that business man is "unselling" himself to the public; if it is "good and getting better," the business man is selling himself and his business, but is in danger of achieving complacency and then failure; but if it is "uncertain," he is alert and most likely of all to succeed.

EOLA HILLS SOON TO BE DEVELOPED. SAID

Ambitious Project Working Out Successfully, Local Realtor Asserts

Eola Hills, lying directly north of the historic townsite of Eola. some three miles west of Salem, are soon to be the scene of an activity which will transform them into beautiful suburban homesites, according to R. A. Harris, local real estate developer.

Development will include the building of approximately five new bridge on North Commercial miles of roads to an appropriate problems have come to a head a permanent water system, civie cording to Mr. Harris and W. M. sonal affairs he will give these Pickell, local real estate men who are handling the selling campaign. Financial interests behind the enterprise have definitely decided on a program including the Eela project and announced that development will be started about June 1.

The land, including 242 acres, will be divided into tracts of approximately one-half acre each and of these 241 have already been reserved by local people.

Rola, according to legend, lacked but one vote of securing the decision whereby the city of Salem would doubtless have been located there and many regard the present prospective development of Eola Hills as a fulfillment of destiny for that location.

The project is composed of what is largely all view property affording a vision of the Williamette valley with the river winding southward through a landscape of forests, farms, fields and orchards.

The enterprise is commended as "exceptionally promising" in a statement signed by 15 of the foremost citizens of Salem and the state who_express their belief that it will "truly distinguish the community in a most substantial
