Music Week Plans Stir Active Interest

Mrs. Walter Denton who has been made chairman of state "good music week" and the first person in the history of Oregon's participation in good music week to hold this position, announces that interest is running high, so high in fact that she is kept busy answering inquiries that come from all over the state.

All the small towns as well as the larger ones are giving much time in preparation for special music. Perhaps one of the most inspiring programs is that which is being planned by Hubbard. This little town is a music center in everyday life so that it has a band, a chorus, an orchestra, and no end of soloists to take up the special work of music week. Two things that they plan to do is of unusual interest. A symposium of musical discussion for the whole community is one of the events, and the churches in community cooperation are presenting a chorus program under direction of Lucian Becker of Portland. Saturday night will complete the week's plans. This will be an old-fashioned community dance.

The friendly cooperation which comes from the community effort of sponsoring good music is of as much value as the splendid effects of the music.

FAMED G. A. R. POST PASSES

Hand of Time Removes Last Member of Julius White Organization, Word

By ROY J. GIBBONS Staff Writer for Central Press and The Statesman
Crosed the thin blue line that was Julius White post No. 240, of the Grand Army of the Republic. Only faded memories remain to four old men, creaking their painful way to meet the Great Commander.

Julius White post No. 240 has come to an end. And only Thomas O'Shaughnessy, 87, the last commander, was there when fate sounded taps, a feeble, sad, haunting taps, out of tune and cracked, for Comrade O'Shaughnessy himself whistled it through his dry and wrinkled old lips.

Four left out of 130 that roared baritone in 1892. Four brave baritone in 1892. Four. One blind, one confined to his bed and a third too weak to walk. In the vast drill hall of the 132nd Infantry, national guard, Commander O'Shaughnessy stood lone on the rostrum. Not a whisper echoed down the block-long building. The commander drew out the post's roll call. Silently he intoned the 130 names. Dead. All dead, except—where were Comrades Orville Z. Barber, Co. I, 153rd Illinois Infantry; Fred Bristol, Co. D, 52nd Illinois Infantry; and William Wylie, Co. D, 2nd Minnesota Infantry? Down the long hall sounded halting steps. A prim, faded old lady in black. She had come to answer the roll call for her husband, too ill in bed to come himself. "Comrade Wylie," said she, "I am reporting for Comrade Wylie." Commander O'Shaughnessy unashamedly wiped two blistering tears away. "Gone, all gone," he muttered. In an envelope he placed a strip of vellum on which the ink of the post's charter had been dry for four decades. Solemnly his cracked lips whistled tape. It was a soldier's instinct. The old post was dead. He sealed the envelope and addressed it to Comrade John Reese, of Broken Bow, Neb., national commander of the G. A. R.

"There are 25 posts in Chicago," the commander said, later. Some are little better off than mine. In all they number less than a thousand of the boys who wore the blue.

"Thirty years ago the G. A. R. in Chicago numbered 100,000 men. Today 99,000 are only names. Can't help being distressed at my post going out of existence. But the end must come to all. There has been talk of combining all posts into one large organization, but nothing probably ever will come of it. "We are too old to organize and in a little while there will be no need of it. You see, members want to stick to their old posts to the end. It's that way all over the country. What about you? Why, I shall probably visit the other posts on meeting nights. I won't be for long." The thin blue line is thinning fast. The sharply etched memories are fading. Even now the bugle probably is blowing taps for another of the boys in blue and Commander O'Shaughnessy the last limb upon the tree salutes for camp fires are glowing in the bivouac of the dead.
