How Much is Cow's Tail Worth to Bovine? TANGLE IS CLEARED UP

By BEULAH H. CRAVEN MONMOUTH, May 2.—The courts of Wisconsin have nothing on Monmouth when it comes to speedy legal decisions involving "wet" questions. A Jersey cow belonging to C. T. Morris, Oregon Normal School student occupies stable quarters in a barn owned by A. C. Powers, local agent of the Southern Pacific company. Cockerburrs, clinging to the extremity of the cow's tail, and disregarded by the owner, became a considerable source of annoyance to Mr. Powers, who, as a good gardener, entertains a marked antipathy to weeds.

In desperation Mr. Powers cut away the offending cockerburr, thereby accidentally severing a portion of the cow's tail. Contrite over the "faux pas" for he also owns a cow—Mr. Powers confessing his action to Mr. Morris, apologized and offered $10 as reimbursement. But this did not appease Mr. Morris who demanded $50 as compensation.

A court of arbitration was agreed upon, involving A. Parker, rural mail carrier, James Gentle, dairyman, and Paul Riley, milkman. The majority ruling decreed that Bossy had lost an important attribute to beauty, and certain qualifications of a good dairy animal, and Mr. Powers was assessed $25 damages. Mr. Powers tendered a check and the incident was closed, with the chief witness—the cow—probably astounded at the huge number of judicial technicalities that were left out of the picture.

CLARA BOW HAS 170 CHANGES OF ATTIRE

A corps of dress-makers, bead-workers, cutters and fitters worked double shifts at the Paramount studios in Hollywood preparing the more than 170 changes of feminine attire needed for Miss Clara Bow's all-talking starring picture, "The Wild Party," which opens at the Elsinore theatre today for a four day run.

The garments used in the production range from dainty step-ins and other filmy lingerie to exotic black and white sequin creations for a dress carnival ball.

Each of the costumes, which clothe the red-headed star, the twelve beautiful flappers of her "gang" and more than 100 extra girls employed for the production, was designed by Edith Head, assistant to Travis Blanton, chief designer of modern wardrobe at the Paramount studios. Miss Bow herself has twelve changes of dress in the picture.
