

MISS HUBBS TO WED JAMES W. JENKS

Formal Tea Given by Mother; Grandmother Also Assists

SILVERTON, May 8.—Announcing the engagement of her daughter, Dorothy May Hubbs to James William Jenks of Albany, Mrs. George Hubbs was hostess to a formal tea at the family home May 1.

Spring flowers were beautifully used in decoration and little Phyllis Adams handed each guest at the door, a tiny scroll announcing the wedding date, June 1.

Miss Hubbs' grandmother, Mrs. Laura Hubbs and the hostess stood in the receiving line, while Mrs. Frank Hubbs and Miss Blanche Hubbs received at the door. Assisting in the dining room were Mrs. Custer Ross, Mrs. Ernest Ekman, Mrs. Forest Stamey, Mrs. Wm. Ferrin of West Fir.

Mesdames George Steelhammer, L. C. Eastman, J. Morley, and Mrs. Foster Cone of Salem presided in the living room.

MRS. STEVENSON HAS SOCIETY AT HOME

SILVERTON, May 8.—Mrs. Henry Stevenson was hostess Tuesday afternoon at her home on Oak street, for the ladies missionary society of the Methodist church. About 20 members enjoyed the afternoon following the short business session in music and conversation. Light refreshments were served by the hostess.

The Ladies Aid society of the Methodist church will meet in the church parlors on Thursday afternoon for their regular fortnightly meeting.

Hubbard Band To Take Parade Part

HUBBARD, May 8.—The Hubbard Community band has accepted an invitation from S. C. Pier, director of outside participation, to take part in the Merrykhana parade at the Rose Festival in Portland, June 1.

The band also will take part in the crowning of Rex Oregonus which takes place at the Civic Stadium just before the Merrykhana parade. The band was one of the many organizations that took part in these events last year and so great was the interest evinced by the men, women, and children of Hubbard who form this splendid organization that the directors were eager to have them appear again. They will be dinner guests of Mr. Pier during their visit in Portland.

Riley Makes Music Talk At Banquet

HUBBARD, May 8.—(Special) Dr. and Mrs. P. O. Riley attended the annual banquet of the Masonic club at Eugene Saturday evening. The doctor was the principal speaker, taking for his subject "The Glory of Our Flag." An attendance of over 300 was reported.

Sunday Dr. and Mrs. Riley motored along the McKenzie highway as far as Belknap Springs. They intended to go much further, but finding the road in bad shape, they decided to return home.

"Daphne"

the ocean when she almost drowned, paddling out beyond her depth, admiring his beautiful, rhythmic stroke, watching his wet blond head cleave through the dark green water.

And then there was the gala night, the red-letter night when he took her to hear Carmen at the Civic Auditorium and she succumbed to Flora's entreaties, and bought a black chiffon dinner dress for the occasion.

Miss Viola was a little hurt because she hadn't been asked to make it. "Of course, I could have made it for about half what it cost you. Those boughten things are just thrown together. Hold still, is that a flaw? No, it's only a basting. . . . Very stylish, but dearie, why did you get black? Black is so old—"

"With her black hair and white skin it's a crime for her to wear anything else," Flora shouted, drowning her out. "In fact if I were you, Daphne, I'd marry some old guy with one foot in the grave so as to be a young widow. . . . If you wouldn't look wonderful in real swell mourning with one of those marvelous hats with white ruffling, and a long veil, and a string of real pearls to relieve the all black—"

"I wore black for Hinkle two years, aber no pearl beads, I had jet," old Mrs. Hinkle mumbled, moistening a crooked finger and rubbing the hem of Daphne's dress to see if the dye was fast. "Ach it looks all right, I don't know, maybe it's stylish, aber, it wouldn't do for me—"

Even Mrs. Spellman, hearing the confab, came and stood in the doorway admiring the new dress and apologizing for her dirty kimona. "Don't look at me, I been washing out a few things, I like to do Mr. Spellman's union-suits myself, the laundry's so hard on them— That low neck looks fine on you, Miss Haines, you've got a real full neck, considering how thin you are. I always like a good, slump neck. And legs with some shape to them. Mr. Spellman always says. . . . Mercy, don't all look at my legs, I got on an old pair of stockin's, and Spellman's slippers, I was just goin' up stairs to get cleaned up, time goes so fast it's five o'clock before a body knows it—"

In the end she had to go up to Flora's room to get away from the mob. There Flora brushed her black hair until it lay slick and lustrous as satin on her small, well-shaped head. Lipstick, and a touch of mascara—Flora was an artist at make-up, and finally—after a half-hearted, "Oh I couldn't, Flora—I couldn't think of it," she borrowed Flora's Spanish shawl!

Coming out of the opera she saw her fleeting reflection in a glass. "Oh!" she gasped, stealing another look to make sure. This radiant, starchy-eyed girl Daphne! Coming out of the opera with Ralph McKevitt!

"It's too good to be true," she thought that night. "It can't last—some darn thing'll go and happen!"

And something must have happened, for he stopped coming. "Busy!" he explained, briefly. "Sorry I can't get away!" So there wasn't anything to do but bear it, and make up excuses to tell the inquisitive roomers. (To Be Continued Tomorrow).
