A New Economic Policy on Tariffs

CO long as the United States adheres to the policy of high D protective tariffs followed at recurring intervals by higher protective tariffs, Oregon may well rejoice that in the grab-bag of tariff revision it has been able to emerge with both fists well filled with increases. Criticism of former tariff measures was that they benefited the manufacturer rather than the agriculturist. This charge can now have little force in view of the generous grants now proposed as safeguards to the products of farm husbandry.

It is indeed singular that at a time when both political parties were practically committed to the protective system, when democrats are as clamorous for protection of their industries in the south as republicans have been for protection of northern factories and farms, that students of American economy who look at the problems of trade and production from the standpoint of the highest balanced prosperity of the American people rather than from the traditional viewpoint of partisan politics are becoming convinced that the time is ripe for a reconstruction of our historic tariff poli-

In the breakdown of communism in Russia Nicholai Lenin did not hesitate to come forward with a "New Economic Policy" for Russia. He faced down the objections of the pure theorists and introduced a modified capitalism, and ever since that day his "NEP" (new economic policy) has prevailed in Russia.

Our study of contemporary economics in the United States convinces us that we need a new economic policy and that the tariff should become increasingly a "selective" tariff rather than a protective tariff. The American people have so far failed to realize the effect upon the domestic situation of the change from a debtor to a creditor nation. Before the war the United States was heavily in debt to European nations. The movement of interest settlements was heavily adverse to us. ment of interest settlements was heavily adverse to us. This interest account was counter-balanced by our export surplus. Thus on one side of the ledger we owed Europe large sums for interest on money borrowed, expenditures of our tourists, remittances of immigrants, freight to foreign ship lines. On the other side of the ledger Europe owed us vast sums for the surplus cost of goods we sold abroad over goods we imported.

The war changed this. We no longer owe Europe and no longer have interest to pay. Instead Europe and the world are heavily in debt to us and the interest due each year is large. Our own ship lines carry a large proportion of our freight. Tourist expenditures alone have increased. We are thus faced with this dilemma: How can the United States continue to be an export surplus nation and a creditor nation?

For in the settlements of international trade accounts must balance. If such a program were to continue indefinitely we would soon come to hold the rest of the world in feudal thralldom. It is a simple problem of mathematics:

How can we continue to ship out more goods than we im-How can we continue to ship out more goods than we import and at the same time expect the indebted countries to pay us the interest and repayments on the principal of the borrowed billions? Transfers of gold would quickly exhaust the foreign supplies and result in a credit plethora here.

The settlements, if any are to be made, must be made largely in goods and there is where a tariff of embargo-ef-fectiveness can have but one result; the damming up of our exports, not for lack of demand but for inability to buy forming close to five billions of dollars in value. The ability of the world to absorb and pay for this surplus production is a vital factor in determining our domestic prosperity. It is significant too that whereas in 1821 exports of crude materials amounted to 60% of our exports this percentage had fallen to 25% for 1927, while on the other hand finished manufactures which in 1821 amounted to only 5.66% of our of the total for 1007. In the tariff bill which has been reported there is no 2050 M. intimation that the truth of our economic situation is perceived. We note not a single revision downward. In every to build higher the levees in order effectively to shut out importations, the net result of which must be to stop the free flow of our products to foreign markets. The sensible revision which must sometime be undertaken ought to be with view of opening some of the gates and encouraging imports up to the level of our exports at the least.

Some of the party sanhedrin may excommunicate us for committing the unforgivable sin. We know all the arguments of the McKinley era and cheerfully grant that the tariff has been a potent factor in our industrial development.

Now is the protective system to be shandened; it should be case the effort seems to have been to strengthen the dikes,

Nor is the protective system to be abandoned; it should be converted into a selective tariff system, with less emphasis on the embargo characteristic. President Hoover no doubt had the situation in mind when he urged limiting tariff changes to the slackened industries. We are not looking at the tariff problems in the light of the candied cherry or the true or cotton textiles, but from the broad standpoint of our wide domestic connection. The republican party if it is to underwrite general prosperity in the future will have to adopt some sort of "new economic policy" to meet the changed conditions of the new age.

The "voice from the air" came to the writer as a voice from the past. Two years ago after a full day visiting historic spots in and about Boston we were resting on the common. Overhead this same plane, which Friday megaphoned its message to Salem folk below, was advertising a brand of cigarettes. The other thing we recall was the lads, sans bathing suits, taking a plunge in the waters of the pool on the common.

The season of annual conventions is approaching. Most of them aren't worth a whoop. They divide into about three parts; a golf tournament, a booze-fest, and peewee politics over election of officers. The fellow who isn't interested in any of these might as well save his travel expense, unless, like a good many, he can charge it all up to the state.

We just wonder if Helen Wills who has had nerves of steel to win so many crucial tennis matches experienced any shaking of the knees as she advanced to make her curtsy to Queen Mary when presented at court.
