STATUTORY AID HELD OMINOUS

Final Relief to Come From Producers or Not at All, Word Here

Members wishing to sell their stock for any reason have been largely taken care of through the selling efforts of the company.
"Bootlegging"
Found Going On

"Bootlegging" members of the Association are those who sell the bulk of their crop to other organizations and rely on the Producers cooperative to handle the left-over surplus, Gibson states in his report. He says that the company considers itself fortunate that it has very little of this practice prevalent in the group.
The cooperative company has outstanding 1087 1/2 shares of stock with a present book value of $109.40 a share, shows Gibson's report. Assets of the company are buildings and improvements as well as machinery and equipment are on a depreciated value made by a standard appraisal company.
Attached to Gibson's report is one from the Oregon Fruit Selling company, a separate organization created to handle the product of the Producers' cooperative. Bert Fanning, in charge of this company, foresees a favorable outlook for the present year on early indications of the 1930 crops. Fanning concludes his report by stating: "Recent reports now well confirmed, indicate that California has suffered serious damage from frost in practically all varieties of fruit and that the tonnage of canning fruits in that state will be the lightest in years. Peaches, which have been the most serious problem of recent years, seem to be the most seriously affected. Reports of this condition are creating some interest in futures and would be most encouraging if we had any assurance of what we may expect in the way of crops in our own district."

PARRISH STUDENT IS PRIZE WINNER

other path reveals Oregon maple, American elm, noble fir, Japanese purple maple, crimson Norway elm, Chinese magnolia, oriental sycamore, white calceolarius, Judas tree, white ash, mock orange, oriental spruce, English yew, golden Irish yew, American chestnut, and Japanese maple. These trees were labeled through the efforts of Sam Kozer and the Oregon State Forestry association.

The beautiful California redwood on North Summer, which was doomed to be cut, now stands unharmed through the efforts of the American War Mothers and Mr. A. N. Bush.
The cedar of Lebanon with its spreading branches stands on Chermeketa and Church. The seed of this came from the home of R. P. Boese's black walnut on Church street is in the hall of fame for historic trees, put there through the efforts of United States Senator Charles L. McNary of Salem.

A maple tree which Jason Lee planted is in the M. L. Myer's front yard at 1058 Court street.

In Miss Chadwick's yard on Capitol street is a cedar. When it was first planted it was as big as a broom.

A large black walnut has stood for many years in Miss Rose Chamberlain's back yard on Liberty street.

Spring is here. The trees are budding forth with new life, stretching out their branches with their new foliage. Now is the time to view them. They stand in monument to those who lived in Salem and who, looking into the future, made Salem a place of beauty, rich in her wealth of lovely trees.

Henry L. McClow died at a local hospital May 15 at the age of 69 years. He lived on route one, box 323. McClow died here in 1922. Survived by a daughter, Mrs. Blanche Kries with whom he made his home. Body at Clough-Huston from which funeral announcements will be made later.

readings, and musical numbers were provided by Miss Josephine Albert and Lawrence Maves.
Problems of the lumbering industry, of interest to bankers in their handling of financial matters affecting lumbering, were outlined by Sinclair A. Wilson of Linnton in the initial afternoon address. The lumber market has been poor for several years, due to the encroachment, not altogether justified, of substitute building materials, said Mr. Wilson.

Poor advertising, propaganda of the ultra-conservationists, failure to develop refinement of the industry at the opportune time, and price cutting were blamed for the slump.
Development of new pulp woods, rayon, products of destructive distillation, secondary mills in the woods and unit mills, and improvement in logging methods were listed among possible solutions of the problem, with an aggressive policy the principal item.

C. C. Chapman, editor of the Oregon Voter, explained the status of the excise tax law, and predicted that the present effort for a referendum would fail. He warned, however, that the state tax commission must use discretion in interpreting the law, or it will breed a long series of lawsuits. He mentioned that the blanks which have been prepared for Washington corporations to fill out under a similar law, are "as big as a newspaper."
What amounted to a debate on the merits of group banking as compared to unit banking, was engaged in by Sidney J. Graham and R. M. Alton of Portland.

Mr. Graham said ability to command able management, economy, security and fluidity of capital were all on the side of the group banks, enabling them to perform more effective service to the public.

In reply, Mr. Alton said fluidity of capital was already provided by the federal reserve law, and that a unit bank, which must of necessity succeed or fail along with the community in which it is situated, is in a better position to serve that community.
Loans, he declared, are decided on a basis of capital, capability and character; and the last two points are difficult for an official in a far away city to judge.

An explanation of the recent "bull market" on the stock exchange was the subject discussed by Reno Aldin, Seattle banker.

He's Happy, Lucky, Too, to be Alive; Car All Burned Up

DALLAS, May 15—Lonner Ralston of this city is considering himself lucky to be alive. While coming toward Dallas on the Salt Creek road Monday night about 12:30 o'clock he thinks he dropped to sleep and missed a turn in the road. At any rate his car went into the ditch and turned over, catching on fire as it hit. He was able to crawl out from under it and escaped with nothing more serious than bruises. The car was totally destroyed by fire.

He was in his office at the time of the first explosion. "There was a sort of soft boom," Dr. John said. "There was quite a bit of concussion but very little noise. Smoke began to curl up around the radiator pipes almost immediately. It was a yellowish brown gas and smelled like bromide. It was a horrible odor."
"I got out into the hallway. Even the flames were such that it was impossible to attempt any rescue work from our side. Then the second blast came. I ran through the rear door. Almost immediately the entire building became enveloped in flames."

Joseph Stahl, undergoing an examination at the clinic at the time of the explosion, escaped through the flame and fumes but his wife, who waited for him in an anteroom, died of the gas after he had sought her in the confusion.
