

OREGON LABOR SAID PLENTIFUL

General Survey is Given of Situation in Various Parts of State

No lack of skilled or unskilled labor to handle the demands of the fruit harvest has been reported by members of the seasonal employment division of the federal department of labor in a statement issued throughout Oregon on Wednesday.

The districts and localities now to begin work and the employment condition found therein is listed below:

Portland—There is a surplus of workers in all industries and we expect this condition to continue throughout the season as we have no particular seasonal crop in this vicinity that will have much effect on the labor market.

Gresham—We have a surplus of unemployed in this district but expect to have need for considerable help during the strawberry season about June 10th.

Newberg—Just now we have a surplus of unemployed on hand, which surplus will be absorbed in about two or three weeks when we harvest the strawberry crop, also gooseberry crop. By that time school will be out so expect to have plenty help.

Corvallis—We have a surplus of local workers on hand and will have no trouble in handling the strawberry crop when it will be ready to harvest.

McMinville—We have a surplus of unemployed on hand so will experience no difficulty in securing help for haying which will soon start.

Salem—We have a surplus of common labor in this district but have a slight shortage of good farm help, wood cutters and housekeepers.

Strawberry and gooseberry picking will soon begin and early hay will soon be harvested. We expect the supply and demand to be well balanced throughout the season as school will soon be out and there are many transients going through.

Albany—Strawberry picking will begin within a week or ten days and growers are now registering pickers for the season. Insurances are that outside workers will be needed to handle the crop. The individual growers are making their arrangements and expect to handle the situation.

Eugene—Local labor is well employed here, although at times there is a shortage of skilled labor and sawmill help. Harvesting of clover and vetch hay will soon begin, and strawberries are beginning to ripen. With the usual floating labor there will be sufficient help to handle the crops.

Hood River—At the present time there is more help coming in than we can place. Strawberries will be harvested about June 5th and shortly after that date we will need a good many women for the cannery. We will need more help, especially women, than we have locally to harvest the strawberries and work the cannery to full capacity.

Pendleton—Reports a small surplus of farm labor, with ample local help to handle all work.

Ashland—A surplus of unemployed generally, with indications of plenty of help coming in from the fruit in mid-summer.

Roseburg—A surplus on hand which can easily handle all future work.

Medford—Reports a surplus of common labor which will easily handle future work.

NYSSA DENIES COREY CLAIMS

Letter States Idaho-Pacific Line Would Hasten Road Across State

Construction of the proposed Idaho-Pacific railroad from Nyssa, Oregon, to Winnemucca, Nevada, would tend to hasten rather than retard construction of the cross-state railroad from Crane to Crescent Lake, according to a letter received at the offices of the public service commission Wednesday from the Nyssa chamber of commerce.

The letter was in reply to the action of the commission in filing a petition for intervention in the Idaho-Pacific railroad case. It was set out in the petition that the public service commission was opposed to the construction of the Idaho-Pacific railroad at this time for the reason that such construction would interfere with and retard action on the cross-state line. "Competition and not interstate commerce commission orders build railroads," read the letter received from the Nyssa chamber of commerce today. "Let some competing line tap this country with short cuts to coast markets and the Union Pacific railroad company will be ready to build new lines."

It was charged in the letter that the Union Pacific company had refused to build new lines on the plea that the tonnage was not sufficient to warrant the expense. "The Union Pacific has a monopoly on rail transportation in this section," continued the letter, "and does not want any short cuts or competition."

Application for a certificate of public convenience and necessity in connection with the proposed Idaho-Pacific extension is now before the interstate commerce commission.

MATTHEWS GIVES TALK TO SENIORS

"If you cannot be a peroxide blonde, be a paradoxical brunette," advised Professor James T. Matthews in his annual Senior Chapel address at Willamette University Wednesday. A paradoxical brunette, he explained, is a person who would rather be someone else, or else the same person doing something different from his present occupation. However, this peculiar brunette is doing the best possible work in his or her present employment, and is not complaining.

Professor Matthews warned that mistakes will come in life, and that there will be moments when individuals will be ashamed of themselves. "Then what will you do? Why, powder your nose and go on," he advised cheerfully. The senior chapel program was opened by the march of the class, in cap and gown, into the auditorium. Donald Grant, president made a brief speech, pointing out that the senior year is a year when seniors do many things for the first time. "We have come to the end of scene four of the act called 'College,'" he said: "only a few more speeches and the cue will come for us all to leave the stage, and the curtain will be rung down."

Following the address of Professor Matthews, the seniors marched out of the chapel, and members of the other classes moved forward to occupy seats approximately the same as those they will have during the next school year. President Doney greeted the seniors and declared that he hoped the professors would justify the optimism apparently entertained by all the students who moved forward.
