room, at the John Dickson home that he was the lone Mexican war veteran.

Matrons and nurses bent over his chair with genuine fondness, while his eyes held a dim, far-away look.

With two canes he later took his morning constitutional, up the long hall to the vestibule and back again. It was too much for him, but he wouldn't lie down. He insisted on sitting in that favorite chair of his, beside his Bible, his book of daily devotions and pictures of his son, grandsons and great-grand son.

Birthday company was coming, his relatives, and members of the Sunday school class of 30 young ladies that he taught at the Waugh Methodist church for many years.

Elder was born in Philadelphia June 17, 1831, and was a printer until he enlisted in the navy at the outbreak of the war with Mexico. He served on the U. S. frigate Potomac and on the U. S. frigate Allegheny. Since 1861, he has lived in Washington.

steamship Laurel, torn apart on the ocean side of Peacock Spit, Columbia river graveyard of ships' Louis Johnson, master, tonight surveyed his broken charge, defiantly spurning pleas of coast guardsmen to abandon the craft.

Confident that the vessel would ultimately drive on dry land, as great breakers smashed against her side, Captain Johnson prepared to spend the night aboard. Coastguardsmen left him late today warm and dry with access through a skylight to the galley where food and water is stored.

From his tossing perch, Captain Johnson can scan the restless sea on one side and on the other a lonely stretch of beach, lighted intermittently with fires of those keeping a silent watch with him. Although most of the crew abandoned the wreck, some traveling to Ilwaco, Wash., and others to Astoria, a few remained on the beach, a scant mile from where the vessel heaved to and fro.

True to seaman style the skipper stayed by the vessel to hold what is left of the craft and cargo for the owners. But Portland agents for the States line owners, tonight notified Captain Johnson to relinquish the vessel and come ashore. However, that word was given too late and a rising sea prevented the coast guard cutter Redwing from relaying the message.

Anxiously awaiting meager news is Mrs. Johnson, a guest at the home of a Columbia river bar pilot here.

"He's fine," coastguardsmen told her late today, but all admitted they would not stay aboard if a way of escape was open.

Tidal conditions tomorrow afternoon will be favorable for another attempt to take Johnson off. Efforts were abandoned at sunset tonight.

By MERLE COBBS

Strange to say the memory that remained the strongest with me after having seen "The Man I Love," was not the man, but the prize fight, and the details that went to create the final fight setting. I am not an expert on prize fights but if some of the shots in that picture do no show real fighting with some real knockouts then I know far less than I thought.

Although the first part of the show is rather weak and a bit tiresome the last acts are so well developed and contain such a variety of tense interest that one forgets the flaws. The human interest and natural, unaffected acting of the last two or three scenes is among the best that I have ever seen in any moving picture.

Bacalova makes use of all her tigerish appeal, and Mary Brian with her devoted love makes a very excellent contrast and a tense situation which Harry Green as the husband of Mary does his part in tightening.

It's better than the average movie.

CANADA DISPLEASED AT NEW U. S. TARIFF

Canada is not at all pleased with the proposed tariff increases pending before congress but sentiment throughout the United States, as seen from a Pullman car, is quiet and unperturbed according to William P. Ellis, rate expert, who is back in Salem after appearing before the interstate commerce commission at Washington, D. C.

Ellis returned through Canada where he found that Canadian newspapers were devoting considerable space to the tariff question.

Ellis was one of the northwest's advocates before the commission in a demand that grain rates be reduced from 30 to 25 per cent from inland to port points. He maintained in his presentation of the facts that such a reduction would still keep grain within the limits of a profitable commodity for a railroad to haul.

On which the commission has just concluded its hearings, was one of the most important ever to come before that city. Not only were the 11 federal commissioners there but nine commissioners from various states had been summoned to sit with the commission at Washington, D. C.

While at the capital Ellis was entertained at a dinner given by Senator Steiwer, Senator McNary and Representatives Kereff, Butler and Hawley were present.

Murder is Caused by Mere Urge

FRESNO, Cal., June 17.—(AP)—Psychiatrists were summoned today by District Attorney Glenn M. DeVore to examine Grover Jensen, 37, who yesterday while following a spiritual urge, shot and killed Hans Christian Hansen, 72, on the side porch of the Hansen Easton home.

A denial that jealousy over the approaching marriage of Margaret Hansen, 26 year old daughter of the dead man, to Rev. Irving Peterson of Del Rey had anything to do with the killing was entered by both the slayer and members of the victim's family. An official investigation gave these denials credence.

"I may have violated the man-made laws," Jensen said today in his cell in the county jail, "but I do not care. I was following a spiritual law. I had sinned against the Holy Ghost and I had to kill Hansen to expiate my sin. I now feel at peace for the first time in a long time."

It was held doubtful here if Jensen would be brought to trial. It was believed that an insanity complaint would be signed against him and that he would be committed to a state institution.

The body of the mother, Mrs. Anna Chebinski, 27, was found at noon lying among tall weeds near the rear of the house. A pool of blood on a path nearby marked the place where she was slain. The three children later were found inside the house. Pauline, two years old, and Margaret 5, were dead, slain apparently with the weapon used to kill their mother. Josephine, ten, was lying on the floor unconscious. She died tonight at Del Ray Industrial hospital.

JAPANESE VOLCANO BELCHES OUT LAVA

HAKODATE, Japan, June 17.—(AP)—The volcano Komagatake, which has burst into its first serious eruption in ten years, poured forth lava, smoke and ashes, unabated tonight. The real eruption began early this morning, although the volcano emitted smoke and ashes on Sunday. A column of smoke and flame, estimated to be a mile high, stood over the peak this evening and was visible from Hakodate which is 30 miles away.

The fire which destroyed the village of Ikusagawa approached Nane the inhabitants of which abandoned the town for Hakodate. Villages for miles around were showered with ashes. The heavy lava flow has ignited the mountainside forests. The Onuma-Shikabe electric line, serving a large district, was completely disrupted, and service on the main Hakodate-Otaru railway was suspended by damage caused by fire which destroyed Ikusagawa.

QUEER MIXUP SEEN AMONG HUSBANDS

PORTLAND, Ore., June 17.—(AP)—A matrimonial mixup, patterned after the ancient and honorable game of "button, button, who has the button?" was aired in court here today and as a result Button won.

Instead of deciding "who has the button" the judge was asked to decide who should have "Mrs. Button."

Mrs. Button, the testimony revealed, had been married to a man by the name of Troy in Montana. She moved to Vancouver, Wash., where she obtained a divorce decree. Not knowing that the law required her to remain single for six months, she married two weeks later in Hood River, Ore., to William P. Endry. Friends told her the marriage was not legal.

However, she left Endry and after six months she married George W. Button in Portland. Endry, the testimony indicated, was not satisfied to lose his supposed wife in this way and trouble between the men ensued. Button signed a complaint charging assault and battery against Endry and so it came into court.

The judge ruled that Mrs. Button was legally married to her present husband and warned Endry to keep away.

So Button has Mrs. Button.

from disposing of $250,000 which she said he promised to return to her when they finally separated.

The woman, Mrs. Virginia Harrison Gross, described by her attorney as a daughter of a former governor general of the Philippine islands, was married to Christian Gross in Algier, January 28, 1922. Her husband was a member of the American Diplomatic corps and was with the United States army in Russia.

She said that shortly after the marriage she gave him the $250,000. Later they separated, Mrs. Gross continued, and an agreement was drawn up in Paris on January 12, 1928 which released him from obligation to support her and gave her custody of their two children, Barbara and Peter. He also was to return $250,000 but has failed to carry out this provision of the agreement, she alleged.
