Prohibition Enforcement Fought Out In Congress With Big Verbal Barrage

WASHINGTON, June 17 (AP)—Shots fired along the Canadian border by prohibition officers resounded today in the house and in quarters concerned with enforcement, several developments adding momentum to the discussions of the dry law engaging the capital of late.

Representative Clancy, Republican, Michigan, stirred the house into debate with charges that the drive against rum runners in the Detroit area has been accompanied by "reckless firing" on automobiles and river boats. This was followed by a plea from Representative Hudson, another Michigan Republican, for the members to give prohibition enforcement the same approval a few of them were "giving to bootleggers." He added that bootleggers were armed to fight authorities.

Meanwhile Assistant Secretary Lowman ordered armaments of border customs patrolmen to be confined to the service pistol. Some of them heretofore have been armed with rifles and shot-guns.

The assistant treasury secretary at the same time declared the recent shooting of Arthur Gordon by a border patrolman near Moores, N. Y., was accidental. In a statement he said Inspector Cheatham and L. Covenly were chasing Gordon after colliding with an overloaded car in which Gordon had escaped. Cheatham tripped and his gun discharged accidentally, Lowman continued, after which the inspector found the fugitive lying wounded.

Prohibition Commissioner Doran simultaneously denounced the campaign along the Detroit river had resulted in a noticeable slackening of rumrunning activities. For several days past the combined prohibition, coast guard and customs forces along the river have been increased. Doran would not venture an opinion whether the decreased smuggling activities was permanent.

The board of temperance, prohibition and public morals of the Methodist Episcopal church in its clip sheet listed recent killings by prohibition officers and said "wet journalistic champions" had run the "gamut of abuse and soba" about the "outrages" of the officials attempting to suppress criminal bootlegging. Deets Pickett, research secretary of the board, in a statement declared published reports of the organization officially approving the killings were "utterly erroneous."

The board also repudiated charges made yesterday by Representative Tinkham, Republican, Massachusetts, saying it had made no expenditures in the last presidential campaign which should have been reported under the corrupt practices act. The organization characterized Tinkham's statement as "anti-prohibition propaganda."

FAST DEVELOPMENT OF AIRPLANE LIKELY

Rapid development of small airplanes which will permit flying from city to city with the ease which now accompanies the driving of an auto from one town to another, is predicted within the near future by Captain H. C. French, president of the Air Club of Oregon who addressed the chamber of commerce here Monday noon.

Captain French had recently visited with a British Viscount who came through Portland on his way around the world and French was impressed with the ease with which the visitor manipulated his plane. He had a four-cylinder motor greatly resembling the type used in an automobile and the plane, while on the ground, could be manipulated by one man. French was impressed by the fact that the viscount appeared as unperturbed by his round-the-world trip in an airplane as though he were making the trip by auto.

English development of the airplane has proceeded away from the cabin type airplane of the United States to a small-motored single plane aircraft widely used by individuals.

French outlined the work being done by his association in furnishing a wide range of information about airplane conditions to the public using the airplane.

STEELHAMMER NOW BACK FROM JAUNT

You could wrap Los Angeles up and present it in a package to Oscar Steelhammer and he would politely—but firmly—decline it, preferring good old Oregon any day to the "unnatural" southland. At least that was Oscar's opinion Monday when he was back at his desk after a trip south with the Al Kader band which took part in the Shriners' convention.
