FRIED CHICKEN, 'YUM' MODERN DEVICES USED

By MADALENE L. CALLIN
Fried chicken! Doesn't it fairly make your mouth water to think of it? Has any one an idea of the number of fryers consumed in Salem in a week? I haven't the slightest notion but the other day I did find out that the Lloyd Lee Poultry farm at Auburn supplies an average of 400 fryers per week to the Salem market. Think of it, 400 fried chickens each week!

Yet that is only a very small part of the work done at the Lee farms. There are two of them, the hatchery and the breeding farms and on the two places, 16 men are employed.

Egg Capacity Huge
The hatchery has an egg capacity of 141,000 and a 25,000 brooder capacity. This brooder capacity is soon to be enlarged some 20 times when the new battery brooder system is installed at the hatchery.

Just now electric and hot water brooders are used, the electric proving to be the best after the first ten days of the chick's life.

With the battery brooder system the pens are built tier upon tier so that as many as 14,000 chicks may be kept in one room. Each pen is 2 feet long and from 8 to 12 inches wide. Heat is provided by means of 60 watt electric light globes, each globe supplying sufficient warmth for from 60 to 70 day old chicks.

18 Breeds Hatched
At the Lee hatchery 13 different breeds of chickens are hatched. Most of these are sold as young or day old chicks and the plant usually has all or even more orders than can be filled.
