Literary Groups Encourage Writing

A long time ago a Chinese sage wrote to the effect that the world was surely coming to no good as children were no longer respectful to their parents and everyone wanted to write books. Nowdays we look with favor upon the fact that many people are writing as a sign of literary interest and we fondly hope, progress.

Acting as a stimulus along the lines of literary endeavor are the various societies who seek to organize literary interests. Such an organization is the Northwest Poetry Society which announces the rules for their 20th poetry contest of 1929, the first of which offers a twenty-five dollar award for a poem extolling the beauties of Oregon. Poems for this contest must be submitted prior to the September meeting of the Poetry Society. The award will be made in October.

The second contest offers fifteen dollar awards as first and second prizes for poems written on any subject. These awards will be made in December.

The following are to be secured as judges: Dr. V. L. O. Chittick of the Reed college English department, Dr. H. B. Howe of the U. of O., and Miss Moore of the Lincoln high school English department.

Each member may submit more than one poem.

Mrs. F. G. Franklin has the detailed rules which have been sent to her from the society headquarters.

Another organization which does much to foster a literary spirit in the west is the League of Western Writers which will hold its annual convention in San Francisco from October 2 to 5 inclusive. The League embraces in its territory the eleven western states and Alaska, the British Columbia and Mexico.

The convention exhibit of volumes respectively by authors who are residing in the League territory. Many of these books will be first editions and autographed by the authors.

One objective of the League is the establishment of a permanent library of books by western authors toward which the book exhibit will be a first step. A brochure will be issued featuring each author with a list of his books, notes and data.
