

CURT COMMENTS

The Webfoots play Stanford Saturday, down at Palo Alto. We notice where a Eugene paper calls the Oregon team the "Ducks," whereas the sports editor of that paper may hear a mighty wail, though for that matter "webfoots" and "ducks" come near enough being synonymous. If the Portland hall team's experience is any precedent that opens the way for somebody to call Cap McEwan's men the decoys, the lame ducks, the waddlers, etc. The dictionary, though, says "duck" as applied to a human being is a term of endearment. If the Stanford rhetoric department is up to par, Pop Warner's boys probably won't call the Oregon men ducks.

Maybe it was Pop, or maybe Rockne, Zuppke, or some other high priced gridiron wizard, who said to many lettermen, were bad for a football team. Lettermen play on their reputations, this get averred, whereas it takes ambitious youngsters to get in and fight. Fight, we are also told, is 90 per cent of football.

These football geniuses have a way of saying unorthodox things in order to get their names in the papers, but maybe this fellow, whoever he was, was right.

We don't believe all the guff that emanates from the football training camps in early autumn, and we're especially unsold on the validity of Oregon's appearance in last Saturday's game with Pacific. Remember this—it was Oregon's only game prior to the Stanford mix, and Bill Warner was there taking copious notes to be forwarded to brother Pop. McEwan undoubtedly was doing his best to give Bill a bum steer.

But if the ballyhoo broadcast from Eugene this week is correct, McEwan's veterans played like a bunch of mummies and the reserves whom we were informed a week or so before he didn't have, piled up the big score against Pacific. Maybe the coach who decreed an excess of letterman had the right hunch.

Note also that Pacific didn't make a dent against Oregon. If the Webfoots were playing Stanford at Eugene or Portland instead of Palo Alto, we would concede them pretty near an even chance. The California climate is something else again.

At this writing it appears that the Portland Ducks have a mathematical but not a practical chance to win the Coast League second half pennant. If they swept the present series, they would be ahead of Hollywood, but that doesn't take care of the Missions, who are playing the poor Indians. All the Ducks can hope to do is to cheat the Stars out of first place.

Whether or not the Ducks are keen to that achievement is a problem we hate to tackle. Here's something about the Ducks we haven't heard anybody mention since they started their spectacular drive two months ago: there isn't a choke hitter in the outfit excepting Woodall, the catcher. Bates comes the nearest to it of the others. The rest of them swing from their toes.

That's why the Ducks are a leather larrupin' outfit one day and a complete dud the next. If the opposing pitcher feeds them anything good, they soak it out of the park; but if he has anything on the ball and keeps it in the awkward places, it's a bad day for Ducks. They have pounded hard on the opposition plenty of times, but their batting averages are just fair. That situation, aside from the dearth of pitchers in the last few weeks, kept the Ducks from reaching the goal they were driving at.

Batting style is also the explanation as to why Walters and Harris get their pictures in the papers while Bates is up there with 'em in the batting averages. But the Walter-Harris style is the Babe Ruth style which is so popular just now. It's a box office style of hitting, and the box office is what rules.

What do you know about this Centralia junior college? Its football team seems to have scheduled a trip into Oregon for nearly every week end this season. It has already played Monmouth Normal, and has a game this week with Linfield. Later on it plays the O. S. C. Rocks, and reports from Monmouth mention a return game at Centralia. Aren't there any teams of Centralia's calibre in Washington?

Dundee and Kentworth Clash Here Wednesday

FIGHTS SLATED EVERY 2 WEEKS

Headliners Will Appear in Cards This Winter Says Plant

Fight cards every other Wednesday night from now on through out the winter, and no main eventers who are not already well known to the fans here—that is the program announced by Matchmaker Harry Plant.

Jack Kentworth and Pat Dundee will be featured in an eight round main event on the first card, next Wednesday night, October 1, the matchmaker announced further.

These lads have fought in the local ring twice, once in a semi-windup and once as the best scrap on a triple main event; and the winner hasn't been determined yet. Both fights were draws.

Since that time Kentworth, hard hitting southpaw who was unearthed locally as a novice last winter, has been fighting regularly in other parts of the northwest. He has built up a following among the Portland fans, and is in demand there. He specializes in left handed sleep punches.

Dundee Has Long Fighting Record

Dundee is a scrapper of much longer experience, and he also carries a mean wallop. His specialty is burying opponents with all his weight behind them, just above the belt. Dundee got off to a poor start when he first appeared in the ring here, but he has gained back all he lost on that occasion. He pleased the fans especially by stepping into the ring at a moment's notice and putting up a good scrap against the heavier Johnny Trambias, on a record card when one fight fell through.

On the coming program, the matchmaker will make up for the shortness of the main event by slipping in two six round fights, both of which he promises will be drawing cards. There will be two special four round fights and a four round curtain raiser.

Kentworth has been keeping in good condition and fighting regularly, and Dundee, apprised several days ago that he would be called to enter the ring soon, has already started the task of finishing up his training, which will not be difficult because he has been keeping in good trim and doing some work regularly.

CLUB LEAGUE STARS START 1929 SEASON

Bowlers of the Club league got acquainted with each other Wednesday night and since it was a sort of reunion for the old members and reception for the new ones, the opening night's play was markedly social in nature and everybody was allowed to win some games.

The Elks took two out of three from Associated Oil, the Lions won by an equal margin from the Printers, and the Nelson and Hunt druggists won likewise from the Capitol theatre.

George Nelson rolled high game for the evening, 211. Lou Grote made high series, 520, and the Elks made the high team total, 2352.

Business Men's league will start its season tonight, with the following teams enrolled: Fairmount Dairy, Salem Sanitary Milk company, Oregon Packing company, Roth Grocery, Stiff Furniture company and Western Auto Supply company. Players are requested to be on hand at 7 p. m.

GEORGIA HOPES TO SPRING A SURPRISE NEXT WEEK BY PASTING YALE ---

GEORGIA UNIVERSITY, sub, will accord Yale the utmost respect in famed Southern hospitality on Oct. 12, next, but it will strain every effort and wish every wish to beat Old Eli at football that afternoon when the Athens Bulldogs dedicates its great new stadium with the historic old New Haven Building as the playing ground.

The Georgia Legislature has declared this occasion a State holiday. And the Governor of Georgia will remark to the Governor of Connecticut that it was certainly a long time between such victories. Some old grads are also hoping that the traditional Governor-

Connie Mack's Last World Series Recalled as Win For Braves

By JOHN H. REITINGER Associated Press Staff Writer PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 2.—(AP)—The uncertainty of baseball has brought many surprises, but no world's series has resulted in a greater upset of the popular dope than the October classic of 1914.

It was the year that the Boston Braves, under George F. Stallings, the "Miracle Man" not only defeated the Philadelphia Athletics but rubbed it in by winning four straight games.

Great was the surprise in Quakerdom and all along the American league circuit when the Boston team, which had been in last position late in July, climbed to the National League pennant, and wrecked Connie Mack's great baseball machine—the champions of the world.

It was the first time that a team had lost the world's title in a four-game tournament without a tie. There was no fluke about the Boston triumph; there were no "breaks of the game" to lean on as alibis. It was a debacle that echoed up and down the big leagues for many a day.

Most of the wise men could see only another world's championship for Connie Mack. No combination was expected to stand up against the Athletics' hard-hitting outfield, or the super-infield of McNelis, Collins, Barry and Baker; or Bender and Plank and Bush, a group of worthy pitchers. But the wise men failed to reckon with Stallings, the brains of Evans, the uncanny playing of Rabbit Maraville, or the sensational work of "Hank" Gowdy. Nor did they figure the Boston pitchers, Rudolph and Tyler and James would stand the graft.

Boston took the opener, 7 to 1, driving Chick Bender from the box while Dick Rudolph checked the A's with five hits. Then Pitcher James blanked the Mack-men in a two-hit, 1 to 0 victory. The Braves charged again and won the third game, 5 to 4, in twelve innings. After that it was just a mere formality for Boston to capture the final contest and the series.

There was the usual talk of dissensions in the team, but nothing came to the surface to worry it. Connie Mack, who had pitched the team to three world's championships in the previous four years, kept his own counsel.

But it was not long before things began to happen. In less than two months it was announced that Eddie Collins, one of the greatest all-around second basemen, had been sold to the Chicago White Sox, followed shortly after by the news that Jack Barry, another section of the one hundred thousand dollar infield, had been sent to Boston and Pitcher Bob Shawkey to the New York Yankees.

Before the next season opened, "Home Run" Frank Baker retired from the team to continue farming in Maryland and as time went on other star members of the team were scattered to the four winds.

ATHLETIC CONTESTS SLATED AT Y. M. C. A.

Plans for the athletic events in connection with the Young Men's division stag mix at the Y. M. C. A. Friday night, were completed Wednesday with the selection of players from which the two baseball teams will be drawn. These players are Hugh Ward, Scotty Marr, John Riches, E. Kleinke, Delbert Schwabauer, Chester Page, John Schnauffer, Dwight Adams, Jerry Hansen, Floyd Query, Harold Rowley, Ed Roth, Claude Ritter and Floyd Holt.

Other events will include boxing, blindfold boxing and wrestling, supervised by R. R. Boardman, physical director. The lung tester competition will be supervised by Rinkes, the baseball throw by Kleinke, the back tester by Ward, the pull up by Query and the jump board by Page. Rowley will be announcer.

The lobby committee includes Judge O. P. Cohow, William Paulsen, Roy Keene, Fred Duncan and Bert Crary. The refreshments committee members are Minton, Erickson, Parr and Crary. Ben Rickell is in charge of general arrangements.

Shellenback Turns Back Oregonians and Gets Circuit Clout

LOS ANGELES, Oct. 2.—(AP)—Frank Shellenback turned in his 26th victory of the season today and kept Hollywood one game ahead of the Missions in the waning second half of the Coast league ace. He pitched the Stars to a 15 to 9 victory over Portland.

Shellenback was hammered for nine runs by the Ducks, but helped win his own game by pounding out a home run, a double and a single, personally accounting for six of Hollywood's markers.

The Stars got away to a five run lead in the first inning when three batters routed Fullerton, Duck hurling adroitly and Heath connected with one of Ortman's offerings for a circuit clout with the bases loaded. Three other home runs featured the contest, Shellenback also hitting four bags for Hollywood, and Bates and Walters doing the honors for Portland.

The winners batted Fisch, starting hurler, out of the box in that round, but were held well in check by Pigras thereafter. Seattle got 10 hits but could not bunch them to advantage.

Frisco Seals Win SACRAMENTO, Oct. 2.—(AP)—The Seals were held at bay for 10 innings today by a rookie, Tony Freitas, but broke out in the 11th to score six runs and put a sad finish to a real game. The final score was 9 to 3 for the Seals and Walter Mills. Both hurlers went good and battled on even turns until the crash in the 11th. The Seals almost clinched their money as the Oaks were defeated.

After scoring twice in the first inning off Baecht, Angel hurler, the Oaks were unable to again dent the rubber. WOODBURN GRID TILT ARRANGED

Tillamook High School to Be Played Friday of This Week

WOODBURN, Oct. 2.—(Special)—Woodburn High has, after getting a football game and will play Tillamook high October 4.

Coach Wolf has been working at a disadvantage this year in having his practices cut to 45 minutes each evening on account of the busses leaving the building at four o'clock.

Workouts have revealed a promising squad of reserves and some new material has been developed into first and second string players. The encounter with Coach Rarey's eleven will reveal the promises of the Woodburn team and will give Coach Wolf an idea of how his new squad can work.

The probable starting line up for Friday's game will be: Radcliffe, fullback; Nehi, quarter; Gribble, right half; L. Schooler or G. Oberst, left half; A. Schooler, center; Lemcke, right tackle; F. Bartos, left tackle; J. Black, right guard; C. Bartos, left guard; H. Gearin, right end; Baldwin, left end.

MISS COLLETT WINS EASILY

Woman Golf Champ Well on Way to Another National Crown

By PAUL R. MICKELSON Associated Press Sports Writer OAKLAND HILLS COUNTRY CLUB, Birmingham, Mich., Oct. 2.—(AP)—The one and only Glenna Collett nailed another clincher to her fame as America's feminine golfing wonder today by crushing the challenge of Maureen Orcutt, brilliant star from White Beaches, N. J., 7 to 5, in the second round of the thirty third national women's championship at Oakland Hills.

On the trial of her second straight national title and her fourth since she first crowned herself as queen of American golf in 1922, Miss Collett shot surprising golf to gain her lopsided victory. She clipped five strokes from par on the rugged course and was stopped with a loss only on the ninth hole by a birdie three off her rival's clubs. Her performance stamped her as the prohibitive favorite to win the 1929 title.

While the champion thrilled a gallery of 2,000 by her golf artistry, the girl esteemed as her greatest threat, Virginia Van Wie, of Chicago, fell the victim of a stunning upset and passed out of the championship picture. Mrs. Leo Federman of New York, turned the trick, shooting even par to conquer her 2 and 1.

The defeat of Miss Van Wie, 1928 finalist and twin medalist with Helen Hicks of New York this year, was the biggest upset of the tournament. Incidentally, it was Mrs. Federman who stepped the march of Mrs. Helen B. Stetson, of Philadelphia, 1926 champion on the twenty fourth hole yesterday.

All of the remaining favorites came through handsily today, but Mrs. Dorothy Campbell Hurd, veteran from Philadelphia who won the national title in 1929, 1919 and 1921, turned in the easiest victory of the field. Salling placidly over the course in one under par, she overwhelmed Jeannette Hunter of Pittsburgh 9 and 8. Miss Hunter, who upset Alexa Stirling Fraser of Ottawa, Canada, another three times title holder, was far off her game.

O. S. C. SQUAD OUT TO WHIP TROJANS

CORVALLIS, Ore., Oct. 2.—(AP)—Spurred on by shouts of encouragement from a big student body rally, 33 Oregon State football men left for Los Angeles tonight to open the conference season against the University of Southern California Saturday.

"We're doped not to have a chance against the Trojans, but we're out to win and not to hold anybody to a low score." Coach Paul Schissler told the students from the station platform.

He also promised the students a team to be proud of before the season is over.

The starting line up as indicated by Schissler today is the same as that which started against the California Aggies last Saturday excepting that Kerr and Owen will replace Hughes and Sherwood in the backfield.
