forth of greatest care in this age group. Visits to the home by nurses and calls of the expectant mother to the health center for advice are two chief methods through which this guidance is carried out.

Service to the new baby includes also delivery assistance and attention for a period following birth. Then, when the tiny baby has passed the first critical weeks of life and shows signs of roundness into a human being, weak or strong, the mother may take the youngster to one of the 12 clinical centers in the county for examination to see if it is getting a fair start toward a healthy body; if not, the child specialist who makes the examination will advise the parent on proper steps to take.

Pre-School Child Also Is Given Attention

This examination service and aid is also extended to pre-school children, who are brought to the county clinics for consultation. In these clinics alone during the first year of the health program, 4,000 small boys and girls were examined and 85 per cent of them were found to have some health lack that could be met by proper treatment. Who could put dollars-and-cents value on the work done in pointing these children thus early away from defects, perhaps tiny at the start, which might ultimately do great harm?

The specialist at the health center makes this examination; he does not carry through the treatment, but gives his advice to the mother or father and sends a record to the family physician. The nurse then goes to the family physician for advice before taking further steps, and if he advises, she then visits the growing child in his home and helps the parents to carry out the suggestion made at the health center. Well Rounded Service

Worked out by the health center is planned for the school child. Health habits are painstakingly stressed and examinations are given. In fact, a third might be added, in the work of the demonstration in inspecting and studying the school's environment that the child's health may be better safeguarded while in attendance. It is through the schools that greatest volume of work is done.

Adults, too, are included in this comprehensive health work, with the staff members and nurses preventing the spread of communicable disease by prompt report and the immediate investigation and quarantine by the county health officer, a regular member of the demonstration staff. Adult health is preserved through the inspection of milk and water supplies, inspection of auto camps, and work in the industrial and home camps. The visiting nurses care and give bedside care in case of illness or accident for a small fee or no charge at all, depending to the ability of the family to pay.

In all this service, directly or indirectly one of the most important functions of the demonstration in terms of health is being realized, for Marion county is gaining more and more the habit of health as everybody's right and everybody's concern. Children are having a chance to grow up well and adults a chance to stay well. And the county is gaining man power.

CANNED HEAT FATAL TO FOOT PASSENGER

"Canned heat" used as a beverage instead of the purpose for which it was manufactured, was blamed for the death of Clyde V. Barger, 34, mariner whose home was reported to be in Tacoma. Barger was found dead about 6:45 o'clock Monday morning in the heavy brush along the Willamette slough at the foot of Bellevue street. He had been dead two or three hours, physicians who examined the body said.

George King, arrested Sunday morning on a charge of drunkenness, said he had been in the group with Barger, and that they and others had been imbibing the canned heat for several days.

Papers found in Barger's pockets showed he had served during the world war in a headquarters company at Camp Lewis. He was married. The body is being held by the coroner while efforts are being made to locate relatives.

An autopsy held last night by County Coroner Lloyd T. Rigdon showed death to be due to pulmonary embolism of the right lung, with chronic alcoholism contributing.

No funeral arrangements have been made, pending word from relatives, none of whom had been located last night.

Large Crowd Hears Miss Albert's Musical Recital

A crowd entirely too large for the Nelson hall auditorium gathered to pay tribute to Miss Josephine Albert, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Albert, Monday night, as she appeared in recital on in the Nelson hall auditorium stage.

Miss Albert was a delight to behold as well as to hear. She stood before her audience like a dainty figure from some portrait artist's canvas and sang with ease and charming grace. Miss Albert's program was varied and gave ample opportunity to show effectively the liquid beauty of her notes with their depth and finest shading. Outstanding in her work is the dramatic expression of the musical theme of her offerings. This quality gave unusual charm to her numbers.

Miss Albert is a pupil of Prof. E. W. Hobson, under whom she was presented Monday night. Assisting with the program were what is proving to be an unusually fine men's chorus, the Salem Civic chorus, organized last spring and appearing for their first formal appearance with Miss Albert.

PARALYSIS STROKE FATAL TO WOMAN

Dora Sophie Kuney, widow of the late Charley Kuney, died shortly after noon Sunday following a stroke of paralysis suffered that morning. Mrs. Kuney suffered a stroke last April, from which she recovered, and October 17 was operated upon for appendicitis and was recovering satisfactorily from this when she suffered a second stroke Sunday morning. She had been living since April with her daughter, Mrs. Sophie Robertson of Salem. For nine years prior to that time she lived in Astoria.

Funeral services will be held at the Rigdon mortuary chapel Wednesday afternoon at 1:30 o'clock, with interment in the Macleay cemetery.

Dora Sophie Koppelmeyer was born in Colanfeldt, Hanover, Germany, February 2, 1859, and baptized in infancy in the Lutheran faith. When 19 years old, she came to Oregon, where she was married to Charley Kuney, on September 24, 1881, all of whom preceded Mrs. Kuney in death, and two daughters, Mrs. Sophie M. Robertson, of Salem, and Mrs. Cora V. Rich, of Scotts Mills. She is also survived by one sister in Germany and by five grandchildren: Francis, Chester and Dorothy Robertson and Mildred and Lois Rich.

Mr. and Mrs. Kuney came to through the reception room to the auditor's. He stayed, about two minutes the returned. Miss Pringle jumped up and said snappily "How do you do Mr. Pantages." He looked at her, tossed his shoulders and said "Oh' hello' just like that." Mrs. Stone illustrated the tone of the girl with a high pitched voice, and the manner of the theatre magnate with a shrug of her shoulders.

"Then what happened?"

Miss Pringle Taken Into Theatre, Word "The barber shop phoned, and I went and asked Mr. Pantages when he was going there. He said 'I'm going right now Catherine.' In about two minutes he came out, starting to go into the hall. Miss Pringle jumped up and said laughingly "Mr. Pantages, I want to see you." I heard him say something about putting her 'in the show,' and they went out into the hall towards the theatre balcony."

(Miss Pringle had testified, and another state's witness corroborated her, that Pantages took her into the theatre to see the show while he went to the barber shop.)

"What time was that, if you know?"

"I looked at my watch when the barber shop phoned and it was about five minutes of five." Miss Pringle testified that it was about 4:35 when Pantages took her into the theatre.)

"Did you hear screams later?"

"Yes, it was about 5:20 by my watch."

"That's about 25 minutes later."

"Yes."

Mrs. Stone testified that she ran out in the hall after hearing the screams, that she saw a man, W. L. Gordon at the top of the stairs, a short man in a dark suit on the mezzanine landing in front of the "mystery room," and then she saw Eunice run out of the little room and down stairs. She said she then ran back to her office.

Under the hammering of Stew. Art. T. Wise and Traffic Officer Courtney, previous state witnesses, on the mezzanine platform. Previous state's witnesses had testified these two men did not appear there until after Eunice had been brought back from the street, to which she had fled.

"Did you hear anything said on the landing?"

"Yes, Mr. Wise said to the officer 'there's the beast in there,' and pointed to the little room."

"Did you look in there?"

"No."

Miss Hazel York, a violinist, who said she had appeared on the stage, vaudeville circuit frequently in the past eight years, identified herself as having been in the office reception room at the time of the asserted attack. She testified she had waited there from about three o'clock until five thirty to see Mr. Pantages and contradicted much of Mrs. Stone's testimony.

Testimony Differs From That of Hello Girl

"What time did you see Miss Pringle there?" Fitts asked in cross examination.

"Between 3:30 and 4 o'clock."

"What did you do when you heard the screams?"

"I ran out in the hall to the stairway."

"Did you see Mrs. Stone out there?"

"No."

"You did not see her at any time out there?"

"No, sir."

"Did you see anyone on the landing?"

"No, sir."

Pantages, whom the defense said was programmed to take the witness stand this afternoon, did not reach it. When adjournment was taken until tomorrow counsel were arguing over the defense plan to obtain testimony from another witness to attack the character of Miss Pringle. The court sustained the state's objection, saying testimony of that nature as not being germane to the issues of the trial.

EDUCATIONAL EXPERT HERE

Dr. James M. Glass Talks to Salem School Teachers Yesterday

The teacher who realizes it is the child and not the subject which must be taught, or the system which injects the human element into education and fits the work to the pupil and not the pupil to the work, is far and away the most effective. Dr. James M. Glass told Salem school teachers and a number of interested visitors from outside points Monday afternoon in one of the most inspirational lectures ever given before a group of Salem teachers. Dr. Glass was in the education department at Rollins college, Winter Park, Fla., talked on "The Four Fold Service of the Modern Teacher."

The four-fold service which the teacher should give if her work is to be entirely successful includes, according to Dr. Glass, guidance, direction, cooperation and learning.

"Time was when it was thought the teacher belonged to the room and that her responsibility began and ended there, but now it is service in other places, not along the classroom, that counts," Dr. Glass asserted. Guidance can best be effected through the home room system in the junior high and high school, especially.

As a matter of fact, Dr. Glass pointed out the whole idea of guidance begins in the elementary school, because the grade teacher is the student of psychology, who must think in terms of children and not subject matter—the child and the welfare of the child is the subject matter. Apropos to the idea, Dr. Glass quoted Stapleton's "Blessed is the boy who, at the time he does not understand himself, has by his side a teacher who does understand him; has faith in him and is willing to walk with him day by day until he can walk alone."

The modern ideal in education is not the classroom as a recitation room but as a laboratory where activities become the chief means to learning, the educator said in showing that direction is one of the services of the teacher. The conception of the teacher as a co-worker with the pupil is gained from those teachers who work with the class to bring real life and life situations into the classroom.

The fourth element of the modern educational process finds the teacher as a student, willing and working and studying to grow in the teaching profession.

Dr. Glass left Salem last night for Seattle, where he will spend a short time before going on to Bozeman, and Miles City, Mont. He has been spending a number of weeks lecturing in the west. While in Salem he was a guest of George W. Hug, city school superintendent. Glass and Hug became acquainted while attending summer sessions at Ann Arbor, Mich., this summer. Dr. Glass will teach in the Iowa university summer session next summer, and will be at the University of Southern California late in the summer for a 20-day post summer session.
