SKULL IS CREASED AS PISTOL DROPS

T. W. Lelsure, rural newspaper carrier, narrowly missed being killed Tuesday afternoon by a bullet from his own gun when it dropped from a shoulder holster and fell to the pavement, the impact causing a cartridge to explode and the bullet creasing the man's scalp.

The shock of the bullet grazing his skull almost knocked the man unconscious but he went alone from North Commercial street, the scene of the accident, to a doctor where it was learned that the wound was not serious.

Lelsure explained the accident by saying that he was taking the pistol with him on his route to Mill City and shortly before leaving had stooped to pick up something from the pavement when the gun slipped from its resting place to fall to the pavement.

Drive Yourself Dealers Err in Sending Checks

Concerns dealing in "Drive Yourself" motor vehicles apparently have encountered a snag in the efforts to obtain refunds from the state covering 50 per cent additional automobile licenses paid by them under the so-called "for hire" act.

The attorney general, in an opinion handed down sometime ago held that the "drive yourself" operators do not come under that act. He advised the secretary of state that the protests of these operators against the excess payment were not sufficient to warrant the refunds.

A number of the concerns protested by writing on their checks that the payment was made under protest. The attorney general indicated that these protests were not sufficient, and that the concerns protesting should have appealed to the courts.

Newspaper of Nearly 130 Years Ago Is Presented To Willamette's Library

A newspaper published nearly 130 years ago was presented to the Willamette university library recently by S. Hamrick, who found the paper in a house he was remodeling. The paper is the "Uster County Gazette," published January 4, 1800, in Kingston, New York.

This old paper presents many interesting contrasts to modern dailies. There are no headlines in it, but datelines are used for practically the same purpose. Instead of press dispatches, the front page has over two columns of "extracts of the latest news from London papers of October 18 and 20." Of chief interest among these is an English account of the battle of Zurich.

A considerable portion of the two inside pages is given to accounts of the death and burial of George Washington. A diagram of the positions of the units of the funeral cortege is printed. Resolutions of sorrow passed by both houses of congress are given, as well as the replies by President John Adams. The columns of these two inner pages are separated by heavy black rules.

The letter "s" appears in the "r" form, which is commonly seen in documents of that time. One interesting feature was the advertisement for a "new and improved" method of curing venereal disease, which was a common ailment at that time.

FUTILITY OF WAR TOLD AT MEETING

Dean Hewitt Contrasts Horrors of Conflict With Better Way

War and its horrors contrasted with the better ways of peace was graphically described to the members of the Jason Lee Methodist church Brotherhood Tuesday night by Dean Roy Hewitt of Willamette university.

Tracing the origins of every war in which the United States has participated, Dean Hewitt made the assertion that the objective of each conflict could have been accomplished without battles.

"It is not the common theory that mankind progresses without war," declared the dean, "but the facts bear out the view that war has been a vast deterrent to human progress. Man must do more than fight to survive. The great monsters of earlier days have become extinct although in their day they possessed seemingly superior weapons of self-defense."

Dean Hewitt pointed out to his audience that armies lose morale when there is no one to fight. "When the boys of the United States discovered Mexican bandits would only offer passive resistance, the fun of the fight was gone," he said, "I am firmly of the belief that Canada and Mexico are safe from our intervention although we have vast superior armies. If we expect to render such fair treatment to other nations why can we not expect similar treatment for ourselves?" The dean declared that young men seeking to lay down their lives unselfishly could better attack problems of disease, of ignorance, of human misunderstanding than to perpetrate war and its woes.

In his concluding remarks, the dean outlined succinct steps individuals could take toward making progress toward peace.

Singing at the Brotherhood was led by Dr. H. C. Epley while Ronald Craven sang two vocal numbers accompanied by Miss Edith Findley.

Appeal Notice Filed in Case Against Paper Notice of appeal was filed in the state supreme court Tuesday in the suit brought by Thomas Mannix, Portland attorney, to collect damages of $50,000 from the Portland Telegram Publishing company.

Mannix alleged that the Telegram published a story in which it was stated that he betrayed Harry McDonald, alias Harry Knight, while the latter was being held in the Multnomah county jail charged with murder committed in Missouri.

The circuit court for Multnomah county awarded Mannix a judgment of $35,000.
