

All Bull Efforts Completely Twarted

It appears that if professional bearish activity has been a major factor in the decline, it has been under the direction of a pool so powerful that it has been able to thwart all efforts of constructive elements in the market. Such theory has generally been regarded as unreasonable, and most observers have attributed the selling to the unloading of stocks by very large traders, who were crippled in the first smash. The selling has been so enormous, however, that even such an explanation has seemed inadequate.

Wall Street is keenly interested the results will be made public. So general a questionnaire has rumored that he is in California.
