Kenneth Barnard, manager of the Detroit bureau, is president of the affiliated group. A. C. Fuller is president of the national bureau. The national and local bureaus operate along the same general lines except in the extent of territory covered. The bureaus have two main dirisions, commerce and finance. The commerce sections work to obtain the cooperation of industry in cleaning its own house. This program is two-fold-honest advertisers are encouraged to hold conferences and maintain specific standards of ethics; unscrupulous advertisers are exposed. The financial department supplies firms and the investing public facts on enterprises which sell securities, real estate, goods or services. It submits evidence of fraud to governmental agencies. When the federal trade commission summoned publishers of periodicals to discuss means of purging their pages of untruthful advertising, the publishers designated the National Better Business bureau to assist them by setting

The business grew and he built a larger factory. It burned and he started over again. By 1927 the business was so big that Huston constructed one of the largest peanut factories in the south, and he added another plant this year. Many of the machines in use are his inventions and he also devised packages new to the peanut trade.
