AGE PENSION LAW SOUGHT

Abolishment of Poor House Advocated by Mott in Speech Here

Through the adoption of an old age pension law in Oregon, poorhouses could be done away with and aged persons who had no other means of support could be cared for in a manner which would preserve their self respect, it was declared by James W. Mott, former Clatsop county member of the state legislature and now a Salem attorney, in a talk before the Salem Lions club Friday.

This could be done at no greater expense than the present cost of maintaining poorhouses, because a greater proportion of the amount expended would be for actual living expenses of the persons aided and not so much for salaries of caretakers and attendants, Mr. Mott explained.

Poorhouses can never be anything but the institutions of disgrace which they have been for 200 years, he declared. Intended as a residence for indigents who have no income, they are really dump grounds for derelicts of all sorts: criminals, drug addicts, prostitutes, illegitimate children and their mothers. Thousands of persons have preferred death by starvation to the poorhouse.

The old age pension is not a new idea; it is in use in nearly half of the states, and India, China and the United States are the only nations which do not have national old age pension laws, Mr. Mott declared. He was invited by the Lions to discourse further on the same subject at the next luncheon.

SAWYER NOT TO BE IN GOVERNOR RACE

Robert W. Sawyer, Bend publisher and member of the state highway commission, will not be a candidate for governor at the republican primaries in May. This definite announcement was contained in a letter addressed to The Statesman by Judge Sawyer yesterday.

"I observe that I am mentioned as a possible candidate for the republican nomination for governor," he writes. "I think it would be very unfortunate if the people got the idea that I was using, or trying to use, my position as a member of the state highway commission as a means of political advancement.

"So far politics has been pretty well kept out of the highway commission activity and it should continue to be kept out but the people may get the idea that it is creeping in if there is a renewed or continued suggestion in the news that I may be a candidate. I am not a candidate, so please leave me out."

NAVIGATION OF COLUMBIA EYED

Complete Survey Authorized By Port of Portland Commission

PORTLAND, Ore., Dec. 27.—(AP)—The port of Portland commission today ordered a complete survey of the upper Columbia and Snake river in conjunction with United States army engineers with a view of determining whether or not navigation of the streams is practical.

Port commissioner announced its representatives will devote particular attention to a study of boats best suited to use on the two rivers. They said the survey will extend as far east as Lewiston, Idaho.

The commission proposes to give close attention to the steamboat now in use on the Willamette and lower Columbia rivers, it was announced that one of these vessels, of the stern wheel type, might be sent up the river in order that surveyors may watch its progress through the rapids below the canals at Cascade and Celilo Rapids in the Columbia river.

A similar survey was started in November by the Columbia Valley association. Representatives of this association were directed to give particular attention to the probable tonnage that could be moved on the river. Army engineers have compiled considerable data on physical features of the two streams.

INSPECTION OF DAM WILL BE STARTED

John Cunningham, consulting engineer of Portland, and C. E. Stricklin, assistant state engineer, Friday were instructed by Rhea Luper, state engineer, to make an inspection of the dam constructed by the North Canal company at Crane Prairie, for the purpose of determining the quantity of water that may safely be stored, and what work will be necessary to build a safe, permanent structure. The dam was built by the North Canal company during the years 1922 and 1923 primarily for the purpose of testing the tightness of the reservoir. The state engineer said the dam had proved the feasibility of the storage of at least 50,000 acre feet of water.

A decree recently was entered in the federal court forfeiting the rights of the North Canal company with the result that a temporary organization, representing all of the settlers in Central Oregon who possibly will be faced with a shortage of water next winter, was created.

Application for a right of way had been submitted to the general land office at Washington. This was prepared with the assistance of the state engineer.
