Prosperity of Salem Is Assured by Diversity of Its Crops and Industry

R. J. Hendricks, Ex-Editor and Publisher of The Statesman, Predicts Good Year for "Potentially Richest Section of United States"

R. J. Hendricks, editor and publisher of the Oregon Statesman for 44 years, was asked this week to recite his views on the outlook for Salem and the community for 1930. His statement follows:

"Asked to give my ideas of the outlook for Salem and the Salem district for 1930, I would say it is good. This is the central part of the potentially richest section of the United States. This is the land of diversity, and that makes it the country of opportunity, for only the outer fringes of the completed garment of greatness have been touched.

"Our possibilities of steady growth lie in the fact that the raw materials may be produced here with little support; manufacturing, merchandising and forwarding on scales scarcely dreamed of up to the present time.

"We now have a dozen canning and processing plants of major proportions. There will one day be hundreds. Many of them will run the whole year through. They will draw their raw materials from the products of the soil, in bush and tree fruits and nuts and truck gardens, and field crops. Irrigation, which will be general, will vastly increase the per acre tonnage.

"River May Be Improved. We have now one paper mill and one paper converting plant. The forest reserves with a down hill haul, together with the reforestation plans that will be worked out, will give Salem many such plants—especially with the maintenance of a barging stage in the Willamette river the year through, which is coming, and which will in effect make every foot of both banks of the river a possible deep sea wharf site, connecting by water borne transportation with every market of the world, with only a cheap transfer to ocean going vessels in the port of Portland.

"When we get irrigation, with all the crops this will mean, this valley will be the best dairying country in the world; and, by the same token, swine breeding and poultry raising will assume such proportions as will pale into insignificance what is being done in these lines here now; and we are doing fairly well, for a start. We have low overheads and will always have, and quality production is assured. We will out-Petaluma Petaluma in poultry, and make Kansas City envious in packing.

"We will have the only year paved highway over the Cascades, with the very forest trees up the mountain slopes yielding both edible nuts and the raw materials for furniture factories. Our essential oils will make many millionaires, with a long list, from peppermint oil to cedar of roses. We will get $200,000,000 a year from our flax and linen and hemp products, supporting two millions of people, directly and indirectly.

"Salem will then be a city of half a million people, like Belfast, and only just started in her real growth.

"With all these possibilities, why does not Salem grow faster? She will grow faster; in geometrical ratio; like a snow ball gathering accelerated size with its increase.

"Where is there such another country, needing only the use of the divine benediction of a combination of sunshine and soil and showers to make it blossom as the rose—yes, tens of billions of roses?"

"What our people need is vision and will to work and determination to go over the Jordan and take possession of their promised land flowing with vastly more good things than mere milk and honey.

"Give us men to match my plans. Men with empires in their visions. Men with eons in their brains. Perhaps that is not quoted correctly. But it is the idea. We need to rid ourselves of the inferiority complex. We need to know what God has given us. Plant it in the minds of our youth; those Edisons and Henry Fords growing up. Let us hitch our wagons to a star and put behind us the day of little things.

"Why, we have in our very history a mine of wealth beyond estimating, that will never pinch out, but will rather grow in abundance with the years. We have never touched it. See what others have done, with only scant materials to begin with, compared to what we possess; and grasped to us as a free and glorious gift by our pioneer fathers and mothers.

87% of All Knowledge Gained Through the Eyes

Necessarily we must rely on the accuracy of our vision for success in life. We all realize that impaired vision that isn't recognized by properly fitting the eyes with lenses retards our progress.

In the interest of the conservation of vision it is well to remember a few preventative measures. They eyes open and close 30,000 times a day. Rest them frequently.

Never read more than two hours steadily. Place the light so that it falls over the left shoulder. A book should be held from 14 to 16 inches from the face. Holding a book too close does not usually indicate near-sightedness but it does mean that the eyes are seriously defective.

The book, work or object is held close in an effort to get a larger view and this means added eye strain.

When you are aware of the fact that your eyes need attention or that your vision is slightly impaired, you should go at once to a competent Optometrist and have them examined.

You need his professional advice; you may require the special services which he, as an Optometrist, is qualified to give you.

His examination will be careful, thorough and scientific. It may be that you do not need glasses and if you do you are assured of procuring exactly the right lens and frame to suit your individual requirement.
