Marion Pioneers Enjoy Golden Wedding

Mr. and Mrs. James B. Simpson of Salem celebrated their golden wedding anniversary Sunday at the home of their oldest son, J. Clyde Simpson at Fruitland, at the home that is known as the "B. Simpson place," where the family lived many years. At 1 o'clock dinner was served with just the immediate family present.

Clyde Simpson was seated at the head of the table with the mother at his right and the father at his left. The rest of the family was seated according to age and relationship.

An old-fashioned cake stand, bearing a beautiful white cake, decorated with a yellow rose and buds. The cake stand had been in the family 45 years.

The yellow and white color scheme was carried out in the guest rooms as well as on the dinner table. Yellow daffodils and Oregon crocuses were used in profusion about the rooms.

The Simpsons were married in Salem 50 years ago, April 1. They were married at the home of David Simpson, father of James Simpson, at the corner of 19th and State streets. The old house still stands but has been moved back and a new stucco house stands in its place.

Mr. Simpson will be 73 years old in June and Mrs. Simpson will be 70 years old in June. Both were born in the Waldo Hills district, and the parents of both crossed the plains in the forties.

Those present were the honor guests, Mr. and Mrs. James B. Simpson, and Mr. and Mrs. Noel E. Simpson of Fruitland and two small sons, Elno and Donald; Mr. and Mrs. Archie Matlock (Mona Simpson Matlock) and two children, Miss Eilene and Robert of Veneta and the host and hostess, Mr. and Mrs. J. Clyde Simpson.

No other guests were invited because of the poor health of Mrs. J. B. Simpson.

Frank Simpson just happened in in the afternoon and was surprised to find a wedding celebration in process. He is J. B. Simpson's nearest living relative, a double cousin and a brother-in-law. Their fathers were brothers and their mothers were sisters, and they, in turn, married sisters, Mary Jane and Laura Hockersmith.
