

Complete Report Is Made to Federal Authorities by American Miner

The American mining man, with a month's growth of white whiskers, was clad in overalls and a huge straw sombrero. Although well nigh exhausted he said he was feeling fit despite the hardships he underwent while in the hands of the bandits who were constantly kept on the move by pursuing federal soldiers.

The homecoming party to Tepic was hardly more demonstrative, however, than the farewell party he described when he left the bandit rendesvous Tuesday night high up in an isolated crater of the volcane Ceboruco after the ransom had been paid. The bandits killed a wild turkey, roasted it and gave him a farewell party which they made an event of much hilarity.

Bandit Leader Acts Just Like Robin Hood

Bristow said he found Cruz Belgado, leader of the bandits, to be almost a Robin Hood and to this leader's actions the American prospector owes his life many times over.

One of his closest escapes came one night when five bandits slipped through the federal troop lines to the neighboring town. They returned drunk and bent on hanging Bristow to the nearest tree forthwith:

Bristow was unable to plead his case in Spanish so he argued for his life by the universal sign language and by tracing pictures in volcanic sand, Delgado then took up his defense and finally talked the intoxicated bandits out of the hanging.

Bristow said that on the whole he was treated well by his cap-tors, however, and well fed ezcept when the federal troops got too close.

what aises are the most popular and they buy according to weight. A turkey weighing ten or twelve pounds is the most popular bird for roasting in the ordinary household, and so the stores will de-mand a certain number of birds at that weight.

Larger birds are purchased by hotels and restaurants. In order to meet this situation,

Beyers said, it is becoming necessary for grower organizations to pack their turkeys with strict regard to weights. During the past season the Douglas county association permitted a variation of
