IRRIGATION AREA REFINANCED SOON

Many more irrigation projects will go on the census schedule for this district in the present count than in the 1920 census, says R. J. Hendricks, supervisor for this district. The department at Washington has sent records of all minor irrigation projects from the previous agricultural censuses to aid in the check-up in the district this time. The larger irrigation districts, as the one at Stayton, will not be included.

According to word from census takers in Tillamook, farmers there are shy of saying that they have irrigation projects, apparently taking the attitude that irrigation is nothing for the coast county to be proud of. In the former censuses, Tillamook county had more irrigation projects than in the other three counties in this district. The supervisor said yesterday that he is reiterating to enumerators that it is part of their duty to ask for roomers at each residence. He also says a check up is being made to see that persons living in back lots or with houses along the alleys are not missed in the count.
