SALEM ADVANTAGES IN MANUFACTURING

INDUSTRIAL SALEM IS FOUND GROWING

that can produce a fine quality of long fibre flax.

The linen industry is in its infancy here as most of us realize. Recently the Barbour Thread company, one of the largest manufacturers in the country of flax products, acquired a substantial interest in the Miles Linen company. This plant comes to double its capacity within the next year or so.

The Oregon Linen Mills doubtless has a great future

Located in the area that may be described as Portland Major, the zone bounded by Salem, Camas, Longview, with Portland as a center, Salem has the initial advantage of location for industrial enterprises. The recommendation of the board of army engineers that the Willamette be given a four foot depth throughout as high as Salem, will give Salem eventually water rates on freight movements. Additional transportation facilities includes three transcontinental railways, the Southern Pacific and the Great Northern and Northern Pacific; also a network of paved roads leading in all directions.

The resources or raw materials for manufacture that lie at Salem's door include products of farm and orchards, forest and wood products, as the major ma-materials available. Present plants can and process fruits and berries, pack meats, manufacture flax and linen products, paper products, woolen products, and lumber.

in manufacturing special goods from our own flax products. The State of Oregon is in the flax business under the name of the Oregon State Flax Industry, with an invested capital of $500,000.

Just a few years ago the state contracted for 2,000 acres of long fibre flax. In 1929, the state contracted for 4500 acres and in 1930 contracts will call for 6500 acres. Chances are that within the next year or so, there will be 10,000 acres in flax, and this is just the beginning of an industry that no city or district in the United States can take away from Salem. Industrially speaking, the next ten years will see wonderful developments along this line, with Salem as the linen mill city of the West.

Hence, the industrial development of Salem is assured in three ways: First: Canning industry along with cold pack and shipping of fresh fruits and berries under refrigeration. Second: Development of industries where timber is required. Third: Development of the flax and linen industry.

Yesterday, a generation ago, it was just plain farming. Today, we are just beginning to develop our fruits and berries, our lumber interests and our flax and linen industries. Tomorrow: With all that nature has done for Salem and the Willamette river valley, we will witness a tremendous industrial development as we have the three great raw products for industrial development, and all these along with a most desirable climate and an All-American citizenship that makes Salem and vicinity a most desirable country in which to live.

HOLLYWOOD NORTH END OF BUSINESS DISTRICT

Hollywood Leadership. It means something to live in Hollywood. Hollywood is alive because its residents are live people. The Hollywood community club launched the initiative for municipal ownership of the water system. Its committee prepared the amendment and circulated the petitions. Hollywood is a part of Salem—the live part.

Set your tent stakes in Hollywood. Buy a lot; build a home here; then take your coat off and work, that's the ticket in Hollywood.

Watch Hollywood grow; invest in Hollywood; help build it up and thus make Salem a Bigger and Better City.
